St. Pius X baptistery, gathering space blessed

BY WILLIAM SCHMITT

At the All Saints’ Day Mass at the new St. Pius X Church in Granger, Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades blessed the new baptistery and Parish Life Center in the space of the former church. Over 1,000 parishioners, including the children of St. Pius X School, attended the Mass celebrated by Bishop Rhoades and concelebrated by the parish pastor, Msgr. William Schoeller, and parochial vicar, Father Eric Burgener.

At the beginning of Mass, Bishop Rhoades blessed the new Parish Life Center containing a large narthex to the church, meeting rooms and offices. On the wall of the former church sanctuary is displayed in large letters the motto of the parish patron, St. Pius X: “To Renew All Things in Christ,” a motto embraced by St. Pius X Parish in its mission and ministries.

After the homily, Bishop Rhoades returned to the Parish Life Center to bless the octagonal baptistery. The octagon represents the “eighth day” of creation, a symbol of new birth. The baptistery, with a Romanesque design rooted deep in history, just like the new church, also represents Catholics’ faith journey of the past, present and future.

In his homily, the bishop explained that “at baptism we become adopted sons and daughters of God and are incorporated into Christ and His body, the Church. We become members of the community of salvation, the communion of saints. This is the beginning of our journey to heaven, our journey to join the company of the saints in heaven.”

All Souls’ Day Mass at Catholic Cemetery, ‘a place of love and prayer’

BY SARAH DUSTMAN

An All Souls’ Day Mass celebrated by Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades included two special relics: the chalice and the altar cross of St. Padre Pio. The relics are part of a collection in the possession of Father Joseph Tuscan, who concelebrated the Nov. 2 Mass at Catholic Cemetery, Fort Wayne.

As Mass began, the bishop asked the congregation to pray through the intercession of St. Padre Pio and to remember those who would be cared for at Divine Mercy Funeral Home, slated to open two days later. Following the Mass, Bishop Rhoades blessed the new funeral home and a ribbon-cutting ceremony took place.

During his homily, Bishop Rhoades addressed the Gospel reading of the day, which was from the Book of John. In the Gospel, Jesus tells the crowd that it is the will of His Father that everyone who sees and believes in Him will have eternal life; and that they will be raised on the last day. The bishop told the congregation that as they prayed for their beloved deceased at Mass, to do so “with faith in these words of Jesus, with hope in His promise of eternal life, and with confidence in God the Father’s love for us revealed in Jesus’ life, death and resurrection.”

He noted that those at Mass who were remembering their deceased loved ones should be consoled by St. Paul’s words to the Romans that “nothing can separate us from His love. So, on this All Souls’ Day, we entrust the faithful departed to Christ’s love, the love that saves us, the love that is stronger than death.”
The Meaning and Value of Suffering

IN TRUTH AND CHARITY
BISHOP KEVIN C. RHoades

The following is the text of the homily delivered by Bishop Rhoades at the Holy Hour with Young Adults on November 8th at Our Lady of Good Hope Church in Fort Wayne:

It is good to be with you this evening for this Holy Hour of prayer before the Blessed Sacrament. I have been asked to speak on perhaps the most difficult question asked by human beings, a question believers ask God — why suffering? What is its meaning? It is a question that expresses the anguish within ourselves when we experience not only bodily pain, but also spiritual pain, in ourselves and in those we love. It is a question also posed when people encounter tragedy and sufferings from natural catastrophes, like hurricanes and earthquakes. Or the tragedy of suffering that results from evil actions, like that of the innocent killed in Las Vegas last month or the innocent struck down by the ISIS-inspired murderer in New York last week and, just this past Sunday, the many innocent people murdered in Texas while worshiping in church. In these latter cases, we see suffering caused by moral evil.

The question of all human suffering leads ultimately to the mystery of evil.

I cannot think of a better place to speak about the mystery of evil and the meaning of suffering than here before the Blessed Sacrament, the sacrament of love in which we “taste and see the goodness of the Lord.” As we pray before the Holy Eucharist, we find the fullest source of the answer to the question of the meaning of human suffering.

According to John Paul II, the answer has been given to us in the suffering of His Son. The answer is the cross of Jesus. The “why” of human suffering and the answer to evil can be discovered most deeply when we contemplate the love of the Father who sent His Son into the world to save us. Jesus reveals this love.

In Eucharistic adoration, we gaze upon the Sacred Host, the Body of Christ present under the sign of bread, the Body born of the Virgin Mary which suffered on the Cross and is now glorified in heaven. The Eucharist is His Body given for us and His Blood poured out for us for the redemption of the world.

The question of the meaning of suffering, in many ways an impenetrable question, finds an answer, above all, in the Passion of Jesus. On the cross, Jesus not only embraced human suffering in an incomparable way, but also made suffering redemptive. He conquered evil with good. He accomplished our salvation from sin and death by His own suffering on the cross. In suffering voluntarily and innocently, Jesus gives the answer to the question about suffering and its meaning.

Jesus brings suffering into what we can call “a new dimension,” the dimension of love, salvific love. The Son of God strikes evil at its very root, conquering sin and death with the power of love. “He conquers sin by His obedience unto death, and He overcomes death by His resurrection” (Salmohes Dominis). In His passion, Jesus took all human suffering, including that of the innocent, and gave it a new meaning. He used suffering to accomplish the work of salvation. He used it for good. His love transformed suffering so that this mortal reality that is connected to evil might become a power for good. So suffering now has a saving power. And that is how we, as Christians, can find meaning and purpose in suffering, what before we might have thought was totally useless.

In the great apostolic letter of Pope St. John Paul II on the Christian meaning of human suffering, the Saint wrote: “Human suffering has reached its culminating point in the passion of Christ. And at the same time it has entered into a completely new dimension and a new order: it has been linked to love, … to that love which creates, draws it out by means of suffering, just as the supreme good of the Redemption of the world was drawn from the cross of Christ, and from that cross constantly takes its beginning. The cross of Christ has become a source from which flow rivers of living water” (SD 18).

So Jesus has not only redeemed us from sin and death, He has also redeemed suffering. He has made it a source and means of something good: redemption and eternal life. He accomplishes redemption through suffering. As John Paul wrote: “Christ himself makes human suffering redemptive to the level of the Redemption. Thus each man, in his suffering, can also become a sharer in the redemptive suffering of Christ” (SD 19). Here we get to the very personal aspect of the question of suffering. How do we deal with it and find meaning in it and even do good through it?

St. Paul writes about this in many places in his letters, about sharing in the sufferings of Christ. He even expresses joy in sharing in the sufferings of Christ. The truth is — Christ has opened His sufferings to us. He invites us to share in His Passion. This gives meaning to our suffering. As difficult and painful as suffering can be, it is no longer useless and meaningless. Here’s how St. Paul expresses this mystery in the incredible sentence in his letter to the Colossians: “Now I rejoice in my sufferings for your sake, and in my flesh I complete what is lacking in Christ’s afflictions for the sake of His Body, that is, the Church” (1:24). So what previously did not make any sense and caused despair, namely, suffering and pain, now can make sense and be borne with hope. There’s now a power for good in suffering, the power of love. Through our union with Jesus, our suffering can become redemptive. We can offer up our sufferings in union with Him. We can, in the words of Paul, complete what is lacking in Christ’s afflictions for the sake of His Body, the Church.

We might ask the question, “what can possibly be lacking in Christ’s sufferings, Christ’s afflictions?” The answer is that all that is lacking is our part in them. As St. John Paul II wrote: “the redemption achieved by Christ ‘remains always open to all love expressed in human suffering.’” In the dimension of love, the redemption “is, in a certain sense, constantly being accomplished. Christ achieved the Redemption completely and to the very limits; but at the same time, He did not bring it to a close. In this redemptive suffering, through which the Redemption of the world was accomplished, Christ opened Himself from the beginning to every human suffering and constantly does so. Yes, it seems to be part of the very essence of Christ’s redemptive suffering that this suffer-

SOLIDARITY in SUFFERING

A DAY OF PRAYER FOR PERSECUTED CHRISTIANS
NOVEMBER 26, 2017
A WEEK OF AWARENESS NOV 26 - DEC 2, 2017

Take action now —
Pray for persecuted Christians, religious minorities in the Middle East

We must not resign ourselves to thinking of a Middle East without Christians, who for 2,000 years have confessed the name of Jesus, and have been fully integrated as citizens into the social, cultural, and religious life of the nations to which they belong.” — Pope Francis, Nov. 21, 2013

The Christian presence in the Holy Lands traces its roots to the earliest days of Christianity. These small, diverse communities have contributed greatly to the vibrant social fabric of their societies in the fields of science, medicine, and philosophy. Their fraternity with the diversity of churches and other religious groups helps to foster greater interreligious dialogue, unity and peace in the Middle East.

In the midst of the turbulence in the Middle East, the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops expresses solidarity with Christians and all those who suffer from the conflict and persecution in the region. The church stands at the service of all people in the Middle East, both Christians and Muslims.
WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. Catholic Church stands “in unity” with the First Baptist Church in Sutherland Springs, Texas, and the larger community after a shooting during Sunday services took the lives of at least 26 people and injured at least 20 others.

Those who died ranged in age from 5 to 72 years old and included 14-year-old Annabelle Pomeroy. Her father, Frank Pomeroy, is pastor of the church but he was not at the service.

“We stand in unity with you in this time of terrible tragedy — as you stand on holy ground, ground marred today by horrific violence,” said Cardinal Daniel N. DiNardo of Galveston-Houston, president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

With San Antonio Archbishop Gustavo Garcia-Siller, “I extend my prayers and the prayers of my brother bishops for the victims, the families, the responders, our Baptist brothers and sisters, indeed the whole community of Sutherland Springs.”

Law enforcement officials told CNN that a lone gunman entered the church at about 11:20 a.m. CST while 50 people were attending Sunday services. Almost everyone in the congregation was shot. Sutherland Springs is 30 to 40 miles southeast of San Antonio.

Two law enforcement officials told The Associated Press the suspect was Devin Kelley, described as a white male in his 20s. He parked at a gas station across the street from the church, crept to the church and allegedly began firing as he walked toward the church and then continued firing once inside. He was wearing black tactical-type gear and used an assault weapon, AP said.

After he left the church, he was confronted by a local resident who had a rifle “a day or two” earlier, engaged the suspect,” AP said, quoting Freeman Martin, who is with the Texas Department of Public Safety. The suspect’s body later found dead in his vehicle some distance away. It was not clear if he died from a self-inflicted gunshot or from wounds suffered when the resident shot him.

His motive was not immediately known. He had been in the Air Force but was discharged for bad conduct allegedly for domestic abuse and served a 12-month sentence in confinement after being court-martialed in 2012.

“We ask the Lord for healing of those injured, his loving care of those who have died and the consolation of their families,” Cardinal DiNardo said. “This incomprehensibly tragic event joins in an ever-growing list of mass shootings, some of which were also at churches while people were worshipping and at prayer,” he continued.

“We must come to the firm determination that there is a fundamental problem in our society. ‘A culture of life cannot tolerate, and must prevent, senseless gun violence in all its forms. May the Lord, who himself is peace, send us his peace and the nonviolence to nurture his peace among us all,” the cardinal said.

Groups mobilize to fight licensure of abortion facility

FORT WAYNE — The Apostolate of Divine Mercy, South Bend, and St. Joseph County Right to Life are among the organizations that have mobilized to prevent an Austin, Texas, entity from opening a facility in South Bend that will provide abortions.

Whole Woman’s Health, which operates eight clinics in four states, reportedly filed an application for a license to operate with the state of Indiana last October. The application is still pending. St. Joseph County and the surrounding area have been without an abortion provider since Dr. Ulrich Klopfer’s license was suspended two years ago for health and safety violations.

U.S. Rep. Jackie Walorski and Indiana Sen. Joe Zagar have issued statements urging the licensure of abortion facility to be denied,” said Ellen Master, director of the TLC advocates.

TLC’s lead counsel, Shawn Sullivan, has also sent the group’s legal position for denying the application to the Indiana State Department of Health.

Simultaneously with the legal mandate, the Apostolate also kicked off a perpetual adoration novena.

“We believe that the legal position, campaign, and novena, coupled with the fabulous work of St. Joseph County Right to Life and other groups mounting petitions and letters to representatives, will cause the application to be denied,” said Sullivan.

There are several avenues to voice opposition to the South Bend facility, and fast and fast fasting are encouraged, as is contacting state representatives or the Apostolate of Divine Mercy at 574-246-9477 or online at www.divine-mercyforlife.com.

St. Joseph County Right to Life has created a media campaign to stir up support across the county: It includes billboards, radio ads, digital banner ads, social media ads and yard signs. To find out more, or to participate, visit NoAbortionsSouthBend.com.

When we think about our part in completing what is lacking in Christ’s sufferings, we can think of ourselves as a mere chaff in comparison to His. Yet, our sufferings are, as John Paul wrote, “a very special particle of the salvific meaning of the Redemption” (SD 27). The truth is, even if a small part, it has meaning when it is joined to Christ. It can be fruitful. We can participate with Christ in redeeming the world.

Our suffering can become part of Christ’s work, the greatest work ever done, the work of salvation. This happens when we have faith, with faith, we offer our sufferings up to God and He uses them in a mysterious and powerful way for the redemption of the world through the power of love, the love that is the very inner life of God. So in faith, when we are suffering, we can experience an inner joy that comes from love, by offering our pain and suffering to God, with Jesus, generally for the salvation of the world and even specifically for particular people. When I visit the sick and suffering, I always ask for their prayers, not just for myself, but for the Church. I believe these prayers have a special efficacy when the suffering person is offering their sufferings in union with Christ.

This reflection, in the end, would not be complete or even make sense if it were not for the Resurrection of Jesus. As St. Paul wrote: “If Christ has not been raised, then our preaching is in vain and your faith is in vain … If for this life only we have hoped in Christ, we are of all men most to be pitied” (1 Corinthians 15: 14, 19). If the cross were the end of the story, we would be left where we began. Suffering would still seem meaningless and we would be left in a state of hopelessness. The mystery of the Redemption, which is rooted in suffering, does not end in suffering. In the end, love triumphs. The love of the cross is victorious.

Through His suffer, Jesus manifests the victorious power of suffering. It is not insignificant that the marks of the wounds of the Passion remain on the hands, feet, and side of the risen body of Christ. St. Paul would not have rejoiced in his sufferings for the sake of his own fame. Our suffering does not bring us closer to the resurrection. Neither would we experience the peace of uniting our sufferings with those of Christ “in the fellowship of his suffering.”

In the difficult question of why God permits suffering. Our answer is very concrete. The answer is a cross. There is no spiritual meaning of suffering revealed, as the individual takes up his cross, spiritually uniting himself to the Cross of Christ, the salvific meaning of suffering is revealed in union with Christ.

Finally, I wish to emphasize that as Christians we do not give a reason for suffering as the answer to the difficult question of why God permits suffering. Our answer is very concrete. The answer is a cross. There is no spiritual meaning of suffering revealed, as the individual takes up his cross, spiritually uniting himself to the Cross of Christ, the salvific meaning of suffering is revealed in union with Christ.

The Lord presents to us the mystery of the world and even specifically for particular people. When I visit the sick and suffering, I always ask for their prayers, not just for myself, but for the Church. WASHINGTO (CNS) — The “horrendous act” by a driver in a pickup truck who mowed down pedestrians and bicyclists in New York late in the afternoon Oct. 31 “weighs on all of our hearts,” said the president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

“This afternoon we heard of a deliberate attack on innocent people in New York City,” Cardinal Daniel N. DiNardo of Galveston-Houston, added. “It’s hard to comprehend. It’s hard to understand why people would do this. It’s hard to understand why someone would do something this terrible.

“With war, you lose everything,” he continued. Before the Mass, Pope Francis placed roses on graves in the Sicily-Rome American Cemetery in Nettuno, Italy, Nov. 2, the feast of All Souls. The cemetery is the resting place of 7,860 American military members who died in World War II.

So often people want to go to war, “are convinced they will usher in a new world, a new spritetime. But it ends up as winter — ugly, cruel, a reign of terror and death,” he said. Today, the world continues to head off fiercely to war and fight battles every day, he said. “Let us pray for the dead today, dead from war, including innocent children, and pray to God for ‘the grace to weep,’ he said.

Among the more than 7,800 graves at the Nettuno cemetery, there are the remains of 16 women who served in the Women’s Army Corps, Red Cross or as nurses, as well as the graves of 29 Tuskegee airmen. Those buried or missing in action have died as well as their families and loved ones, and work toward greater respect and understanding among all people so that heinous and evil acts like this become a thing of the past.”

Shortly after hearing news reports about the attack, Bishop Michael F. Burbidge of Arlington, Virginia, tweeted: “Let us pause to pray for those killed and injured in Lower Manhattan as we ask God to watch over us in our hour of need and always.”

The New York attack was being investigated as terrorism, according to CNN, which quoted New York Mayor Bill de Blasio as saying it was “an act of terror and a particularly cowardly act of terror.” But he also said New Yorkers are resilient. He called on all to be vigilant as the city’s Halloween parade went on as planned.

CBS News reported the suspect yelled “Allah Akbar.” Arabic for “God is great,” when he got out of the truck he was driving.

Five of those who died were part of a large group of longtime friends visiting from Argentina.

President Donald Trump said in a statement: “Our thoughts and prayers are with the victims of today’s terrorist attack in New York City and their families.”

U.S. bishops’ conference arose out of a national crisis a century ago

BY RUSSELL SHAW

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops arose out of a national crisis a century ago, when the U.S. entered World War I.

In responding to this historic event, the Catholic Church sought how to best serve both its own people and the larger national community at a time of great need, and today the needs of the church and the common good at large continue to guide the USCCB and those who work for it.

As national mobilization moved ahead in 1917 following the U.S. entry into the war, the American bishops established the National Catholic War Council to coordinate Catholic responses to the emergency.

In the months that followed, the council’s efforts included recruiting military chaplains, promoting recreational services for servicemen, and, via a women’s committee, encouraging women to engage in needed activities focusing on displaced persons and child welfare.

“The bishops felt they wanted to make sure they were directing the Catholic effort and not just kind of watching it take place,” Bishop Earl A. Boyea of Lansing, Michigan, told Catholic News Service.

“And, the best way to do that was to get all of the bishops together to figure out how we act as a national group of bishops to help lead Catholic efforts in various areas of needs regarding our own country,” he said in an interview during the USCCB’s July convocation.

After the war, the bishops decided to continue and expand their collaboration on the national level.

In a letter to the Vatican, Cardinal James Gibbons of Baltimore, the hierarchy’s de facto leader, said the bishops sought to create “a unified force … directed to the furthering of those general policies which are vital to all.”

Pope Benedict XV approved the plan for a permanent organization to be called the National Catholic Welfare Conference, the precursor to the USCCB, whose mission remains the same a century later.

The conference’s mission statement identifies three broad forms of activity:

— “Acting collaboratively on vital issues confronting the church and society.”

— “Fostering communion with the church in other nations, within the church universal” under the leadership of the pope, “its supreme pastor.”

— “Offering appropriate assistance to each bishop in fulfilling his particular ministry in the local church.”

An early expression of this vision was the postwar program of social reconstruction, issued by the bishops’ Administrative Committee in February 1919.

Declaring “social justice and a contented people” to be the “only safeguard of peace,” it urged policies — now generally taken for granted but decidedly forward-looking at the time — that included minimum wage legislation; government-sponsored health and old-age insurance; need of child labor laws; enforcement of women’s equality for women; and strict anti-monopoly enforcement.

Msgr. John A. Ryan, a professor of political economy and moral theology at The Catholic University of America, drafted the document. The priest came to head the NCWC social action department for the next quarter-century.

NCWC soon became a strong and effective voice for the U.S. church articulating Catholic views on a variety of issues.

Archbishop Edward J. Hanna of San Francisco was the NCWC’s first chairman and Paulist Father John J. Burke was its first general secretary. The priest, later named a monsignor, was former editor of Catholic World magazine.

Father Burke had spearheaded the efforts to begin an official Catholic response to World War I at the request of the Catholic bishops. He convened the foundational meeting at The Catholic University of America in Washington that led to the creation of the bishops’ war council in 1917.

At its headquarters in Washington, the NCWC had departments for educational legislation, social action, lay organizations, and press and publicity, along with a bureau for helping immigrants and an international news agency serving the Catholic press.

NCWC provided information and resources to help bishops open offices in dioceses in their work, and served frequently as a model for the establishment of similar conferences of bishops in other countries.

In the mid-1930s, worried about the deteriorating tone of motion pictures, the bishops launched a successful program to provide moral evaluations of films and rally Catholic public opinion through an organization called the Legion of Decency.

During World War II, they established Catholic Relief Services to provide material assistance to refugees and people in war-torn nations. Today CRS, based in Baltimore, remains a major source of relief and development aid in many parts of the world. In the Cold War years, anti-communist education and action were features of many NCWC programs.

“We really are unique and our experience brought us all of the way up to the Second Vatican Council at which point, this was recommended for all of the bishops’ groupings and national groupings to have an office,” Bishop Boyea said. “We became in a sense almost a model for the rest of the world.”

Vatican II (1962-65) in its Decree on the Pastoral Office of Bishops commended existing bishops’ conferences, urged that conferences be established in places where they did not yet exist, and sketched their functions.

In 1966, the U.S. bishops replaced the NCWC with a dual structure: the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, for canonical, doctrinal and church life affairs; and the U.S. Catholic Conference, for temporal concerns. Programs of the old NCWC were continued and new ones were added.

The NCCB dealt with matters such as doctrine, liturgy, canon law, seminars, priestly life and ministry, the permanent diaconate, ecumenical and interreligious affairs, pro-life activities, and others. The USCCB reflected the Catholic Church’s engagement with the world in the areas of education, social justice, and communication.

In the years immediately after Vatican II, much of the work of the NCCB and USCC focused on carrying out changes flowing from the ecumenical council or directed by changing conditions in secular society.

Following the Supreme Court’s 1973 Roe v. Wade decision legalizing abortion, pro-life education and advocacy became even higher priorities for the hierarchy. The bishops also established a new domestic anti-poverty program, the Catholic Campaign for Human Development. The 1980s brought widely discussed collec-
Mass formally opens canonization cause for Black Elk

Nicholas Black Elk is pictured in an undated historical photo, teaching a girl how to pray the rosary. Bishop Robert D. Gruss of Rapid City, S.D., celebrated an Oct. 21 Mass at Holy Rosary Church in Pine Ridge, S.D., to open the sainthood cause for the Native American who has been described as someone who merged the Lakota and Catholic culture in a way “that drew him deeper into the mystery of Christ’s love and the church.” “Black Elk’s love for God and Scripture led him to become a catechist, fulfilling the mission of all disciples,” said Bishop Gruss, in his homily at the Mass. Black Elk was born sometime between 1858 and 1866. He died Aug. 19, 1950, at Pine Ridge.
USF announces Christmas festivities

FORT WAYNE — The University of Saint Francis has announced the schedule for its annual Christmas tradition of yuletide celebration, Christmas at USF.

Christmas at USF events begin Dec. 1. Many are free, and all have free parking. More information is also available at sf.edu/christmas.

Christmas in the Castle will allow visitors to tour historic Brookside, formerly known as the Bass mansion, and see it specially decorated for Christmas by local florists and designers. It will take place Friday, Dec. 1 - 4-6 p.m.; Saturday, Dec. 2 - noon-5 p.m.; Sunday, Dec. 3 - noon-5 p.m.; Monday, Dec. 4 - 4-6 p.m.; and Tuesday, Dec. 5 - noon-5 p.m. is Senior Day in the Castle ($5 admission for senior citizens). Tickets are $7 and must be purchased in the North Campus lobby at 2702 Spring St. on event days. Free parking and shuttles for those with mobility issues are available at the North Campus.

A Fair Trade Alternative Shopping Bazaar will be conducted on Saturday and Sunday, Dec. 2 and 3, from noon-5:30 p.m. at the North Campus. The bazaar offers high-quality, fairly traded handicrafts of disadvantaged producers from all over the world. USF students will perform Las Posadas at 5:30 p.m. on Dec. 3 as they walk through the USF campus portraying Mary and Joseph’s journey in search of lodging. A traditional part of Hispanic Christmas celebrations, posadas, meaning “shelters” or “inns” are held on each of the nine nights leading up to Christmas, Dec. 16 to 24. The procession will begin on the lawn near Brookside and proceed through campus before ending on the shore of Mirror Lake to lead into the Living Nativity.

The Lighting of the Lake will honor special loved ones on Dec. 3 at 6 p.m. on the lawn near Brookside, in concert with the Living Nativity. As a symbol of Christmas, vigil lights will encircle part of Mirror Lake. Luminaries dedicated to loved ones can be purchased for the light display at $10 each by calling 260-399-8034 by Nov. 25.

A Living Nativity with children’s petting zoo will take place Sunday, Dec. 3, with the petting zoo open from 5 to 5:45 p.m. in the lawn next to Brookside. Students of the university community present the Living Nativity, which recalls the tradition of re-enacting the first Christmas, started in 1823 by St. Francis of Assisi. The event is free, with parking at the USF campus off Leesburg Road.

Lindenwood to host Advent day retreat

DONALDSON — Father Jerry Schweitzer returns to Lindenwood Retreat and Conference Center on Monday, Dec. 11, from 8:30 a.m. until 3 p.m. EST. to lead an Advent day retreat exploring the question, Who is St. Joseph, spouse of Mary? The cost is $35 and includes lunch and refreshments.

Participants will discover answers to the questions of what Scripture reveals about St. Joseph. In this retreat, Father Schweitzer will explore the life and witness of this great saint of the Catholic Church.

Register by Dec. 6. For more information, email lindenwood@poohandmaids.org or call 574-925-1780. Lindenwood Retreat and Conference Center, a part of The Center at Donaldson, is a ministry of The Poor Handmaids of Jesus Christ.

Magazines for young-adult Catholics now offered by OSV

HUNTINGTON — Our Sunday Visitor publishing company hopes to help young people embrace the fullness and love of Christ by offering two new monthly publications.

In light of the priority Pope Francis has established for the church to provide pastoral care for young people — demonstrated by his convening of a 2018 synod on “Young People, Faith, and Vocational Discernment” — Our Sunday Visitor acknowledges that keeping millennials in the church is no small task and that parishes are in “grave need of resources to help lead young people to recognize and accept the call to the fullness and love of Christ.” The company aims to assist with this ministry by publishing Radiant Magazine and Valiant Magazine, produced specifically for young Catholic women and men who are innovative, courageous, authentic, humorous and loving, and not afraid to answer God’s call to live their lives with joy, determination and conviction.

The high-end, glossy publications bring together articles written by nationally known musicians, bloggers, authors, speakers and filmmakers to create an entire experience catering to the whole person. Topics range from health to eternity to fashion to adventure, all centered on the strength and beauty of Christ and his church. The content expresses that God is not only present in the power and majesty of Jesus Christ. The Center at Donaldson, is a ministry of The Poor Handmaids of Jesus Christ.

Catholic young adults from the South Bend area gathered at a local pub Oct. 17 for a presentation by Deacon Mel Tardy on “How the church can respond to racism” — an appropriate lead-in to November, which is Black Catholic History month.

Deacon Tardy, of St. Augustine Parish, South Bend, spoke to a back room full of young adults at Corby’s Pub. He began by sharing his own experience as an African-American Catholic, and then spoke on the racism that has existed throughout the history of the United States — both outside of and within the church.

“The church teaches that everybody has human dignity: Everybody should be treated as equals,” Deacon Tardy said. “The church has always been consistent in teaching that. It just hasn’t always been consistent in practicing that.”

He shared examples, such as when he was an undergraduate student at the University of Notre Dame. He had two distinct groups of Catholic friends: one that consisted of other African-American students, and the other that consisted of white Catholic students.

Deacon Tardy recalled that his white Catholic friends often vocally questioned his intellect. According to Deacon Tardy, they would pose racially offensive questions, such as, “How did you get in here? What were your SAT scores? You had to get in [to Notre Dame] because of affirmative action!”

At the same time, his African-American friends questioned his decision to remain Catholic.

“They would say, ‘Why are you Catholic? The Catholic Church is a racist church,’” Tardy said. “The Catholic Church, of course, was not inherently racist. Yet, there is an unfortunate history of American members of the Catholic Church who seem to have perpetuated this.”

“There were bishops who wrote defenses of slavery,” Deacon Tardy said. “That’s a good thing, and we should have it.” References to such letters from bishops can be found in books like as “Stamped with the Image of God: African-Americans as God’s Image in Black,” which discusses the role of African-Americans in Catholicism.

One might ask how the Catholic Church could let something like this happen. The church is supposed to lead people closer to God and living a good life. “It’s supposed to reveal Truth,” Deacon Tardy said. “That it’s a good thing, and we should have it. It’s an inequality based on race.”

However, he was clear that American Catholics of all races also played important roles in the fight to correct racial injustices.

The former president of Notre Dame, Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, stood with Dr. Martin Luther King and religious sisters who were integral in the Selma march — to name a few.

He also mentioned that when Dr. King was younger, he did not care for white people. He grew up seeing the oppression and injustices placed on himself and his family. Later, his faith helped him to realize that he should not hate anyone.

“To be a Christian you have to have a Christian response,” Deacon Tardy said. “You can’t be a Christian and a follower of Jesus Christ and hate somebody because of how they treat you.”

Instead, he says, “that we have to open up our eyes to what’s really happening, and respond with love and respond with justice.” This includes how one reacts to injustices such as the hate recently demonstrated in Charlottesville, Virginia. However, it goes deeper than that.

These injustices exist in many ways that are not as overt as they were in the past. They exist in the indirect ways some people use to put down certain groups of people or prevent them from having equal opportunities at economic success.

“We can’t think of racism the way it used to be thought of, where it’s this overt thing,” he said. “It’s when a certain group of people have power over another group of people and can manipulate that power. It’s an inequality based on race.”

Later, he added: “I just want to give you a sense that racism is alive and well today. It just evolves. If we don’t acknowledge that there’s a problem, that’s when you perpetuate it.”

The talk was hosted by St. Joseph Parish in South Bend as part of its monthly Theology on Tap series. The talks are typically the third Tuesday of every month and are scheduled to take place at Corby’s through June.

Counseling initiative prepares students for success beyond school

BY EMILY DIEHM

A 2017 Gold Star School Counseling Award from the Indiana Department of Education was presented this fall to St. Elizabeth Ann Seton School in Fort Wayne. Gold Star Schools are those in which the school counselor-led steering team has met specific criteria identified for the development of a comprehensive school counseling model.

In a news release, Dr. Jennifer McCormick, Indiana superintendent of public instruction, commended Gold Star recipient schools’ community members and counselors for their role in preparing students for success beyond high school.

In order to qualify for this honor, St. Elizabeth Ann Seton created a steering team of school staff and parents, as well as an advisory committee of students, parents, staff and community members. Together, they developed a school counseling program that addressed all the Indiana State Standards for guidance. The plan that was implemented at the start of the 2017-18 school year and offers career and classroom lessons, and more group counseling opportunities than in the past. Individual counseling will be available as well.

The Gold star strategy that St. Elizabeth Ann Seton created is data-driven. “We surveyed the entire student body in order to determine what areas needed to be addressed,” said school counselor Tara Walulik. “From there, the advisory committee created priority goals and then looked for root causes and used those to determine what programming was needed.”

The steering team created lesson plans for each level from the following domains: academic, career and social/emotional development.

"The lesson plans we developed align with guidance standards. We also devised a list of activities proposed for this year and a list of future activities," said Walulik.

Walulik worked closely with Sue Reynolds, founder and president of American Student Achievement Institute, as well as ASAI representative Debbie Howell, to develop a program to meet the state-set Gold Star requirements. According to Walulik, ASAI provided constant guidance and feedback. After each step in the process that St. Elizabeth submitted to ASAI, it would approve or make recommendations for revision.

"ASAI assisted by providing every tool that you could image," said Walulik. “They aided us from the student/counselor survey to drilldown reports, how to select the committee, how to run each meeting, crosswalks to make sure that each goal and standard are addressed, and training in how to identify root causes.”

ASAI notified the state in mid-July that St. Elizabeth Ann Seton School had satisfied all Gold Star requirements. The school is now implementing its Gold Star plan. Although Walulik said it’s too soon to say if there is a “climate change,” since this is the rollout year, she is “confident in saying that our program more closely aligns with the state standards.”

Immediate and priority goals include addressing student behavior, applying the student career interest inventory and working with and providing students with ways to help reduce stress. The team utilized data collected through a student response survey to drive the priorities to areas that would address student needs.

“The three areas determined most important to focus on this year were reducing behavior resulting in students being sent to the office, career exploration in middle school, and addressing anxiety, specifically in our upper elementary,” said Walulik.

Over the summer, St. Elizabeth Ann Seton’s discipline committee met to create a plan to address some areas of student behavior. Middle school students participate in activities devoted to career exploration and create presentations for upcoming student-led conferences. Younger grades will be involved in career lessons during guidance classes.

Currently, Walulik is teaching an anxiety unit to second- and third-graders, and said that eventually all grades will join in on this topic.

Walulik studied the American School Counselor Association model in graduate school, then interned at a Gold Star school. The experiences were what lead her to implement a plan to raise student achievement and improve overall student success by creating a similar program for St. Elizabeth Ann Seton.

“The school counseling profession has come a long way,” said Walulik. “I wanted to make sure that I was offering a comprehensive program that would benefit all students, in all of the domains. We designed the program for our specific student needs, and we will need to continue to evaluate and meet the annual requirements to maintain the Gold Star status.”

Walulik is proud of the work the committee was able to accomplish, as well as of the St. Elizabeth Ann Seton School and community.

“I truly believe that we have some of the most kind and caring students and families at our school. We also have a staff that cares very deeply about the social and emotional well-being of our students,” said Walulik. “Put them together and we have a powerful combination that provides an environment not only for academic excellence, but also a safe and welcoming learning environment where students can grow into responsible contributing members of society.”

Principal Lois Widner, school parent Lisa Vance, counselor Tara Walulik, teacher Karen Tippmann and school parent Sarah Steffan, from left, were tasked with the challenge of creating a plan that would incorporate the Indiana State Standards for guidance. Together the group devised a strategy that will allow for focus on the academic, social and emotional well-being of all students at St. Elizabeth Ann Seton School, Fort Wayne. One component of the award-winning program they created is whole-class counseling for the student body, which will be carried out by Walulik.

Bishop Rhoades then spoke of Catholic Cemetery’s beauty. He shared that it was beautiful not only because of its picturesque grounds, but also because it is a holy place and a place of prayer and love. The cemetery is a place of love, he said, because “here we remember with love those whose affection we have known in our lives.” The cemetery is also a holy place, because the ground and the graves have been blessed; also, because it is a place of prayer.

“No one buried or entombed here is forgotten,” Bishop stated. While there are people buried in the cemetery who are forgotten by those who knew them in their earthly life, they are not forgotten by the Church, which remembers the deceased in prayer at every Mass no matter where they are buried. He added that “It is a beautiful spiritual work of mercy to pray for the dead. They are aided by our prayers in their purifying journey to heaven.”

Divine Mercy Funeral Home, the first Catholic funeral home in the diocese, will also be a holy place, he said. He explained that in the days and years to come “many prayers will be offered at funeral vigil services, and many rosaries will be recited for the souls of the faithful departed in our new funeral home.” Along with these prayers, the existence of the Catholic funeral home will prompt acts of a spiritual work of mercy: comforting the afflicted. The bishop stated that he hopes and prays that people will experience the love of Christ and His Church through the ministry of our funeral home staff and that those who mourn will receive the Lord’s comfort and strength.

Besides the spiritual works of mercy of praying for the dead and comforting the afflicted, the cemetery also performs the corporal work of mercy of burying the dead. The bishop explained that part of this corporal work of mercy means the proper care of the deceased, and that “the Divine Mercy Funeral Home, in accord with Catholic teaching, will always show the upmost respect for the bodies of the deceased” brought to the funeral home.

“Many will indeed grieve over losing their loved ones, but it is our mission to help them to grieve with the hope of being reunited with them,” he said. “In their sadness and sorrow, I pray many will find healing and strength in the conviction of St. Paul and of our Christian faith that nothing, not even death, can separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord.”

The bishop ended with the prayer, “May the souls of all the faithful departed, through the mercy of God, rest in peace.”

After Mass, the congregation gathered at the doors of Divine Mercy Funeral Home. Casey Miller, executive director of Divine Mercy Funeral Home and Catholic Cemetery, spoke. He thanked Bishop Rhoades, the priests and deacons in the diocese, and the board of directors of Catholic Cemetery for their approval, leadership and work in making Divine Mercy Funeral Home a reality.

A ribbon-cutting took place, after which those present accompanied the bishop inside, where he blessed each room of the facility, and its elements. He also took a moment to thank Miller and the Divine Mercy staff, and to encourage them by noting that their ministry would be strong in another spiritual mission of giving comfort to others due to their own strong faith.

Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades offered Mass on Thursday, Nov. 2, at Catholic Cemetery and blessed the newly constructed Divine Mercy Funeral Home on cemetery grounds. On Friday, special guests were invited to tour the facility, followed by tours for the general public on Saturday.

Ground was initially broken last February for the first Catholic funeral home in the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend, in an event attended by local and diocesan dignitaries. Bishop Rhoades sprinkled holy water on the ground and invoked God’s blessing on the facility and its mission. He said at that time, “I am hopeful that this new ministry of the Catholic Cemetery Association will bear much good fruit in serving the Church’s mission of mercy.” That vision has come to fruition in a beautiful, stone-enhanced, 14,000-square-foot building topped with three gold crosses — representing the Holy Trinity — and interior appointments that represent Catholic faith and traditions.

The beauty and richness of the Catholic faith is evident the moment one approaches the building and the two life-size stone angels who stand guard at its imposing entrance. A mosaic image of the Divine Mercy, created in Italy by artist Chris Botti and reconstructed on site, graces the foyer. Photographs of the altars from 17 area Catholic churches line the walls, and passages from Holy Scripture appear throughout the facility.

Executive director Casey Miller said, “We feel the magnitude of what we’ve done here” in constructing the first Catholic funeral home in the diocese. Its distinctly purposeful and powerful Catholic difference was approved by Bishop Rhoades and overseen by Father Dan Scheidt, pastor of St. Vincent de Paul Parish, Fort Wayne, who was appointed by the bishop to choose the Bible passages and select the funeral home’s interior appointments.

The funeral home features two spacious, light-infused visitation rooms, the St. Faustina Kowalska room and the St. John Paul II room. Each can accommodate a wake, vigil and rosary for the deceased, has an adjoining private family room and is decorated with glass-enclosed cabinets displaying liturgical artifacts on loan from Cathedral Museum. And each has beautiful, restful exterior views of the adjoining Catholic Cemetery grounds.

The facility contains administrative offices, a vesting room for priests with a small altar, a conference room for funeral planning, a selection room where families may choose caskets and vaults, as well as a crematorium and embalming facility. A plaque appears on the door of that room to remind workers of the reverence to be accorded the body in death. “It is the most sacred room in the building,” Miller pointed out. He was also quick to add that the funeral home will be used for visitation only, since the funeral Mass will always be held in the decedent’s parish church.

Divine Mercy Funeral Home will have an organist on site, as well as two licensed funeral directors, Bob Jesch and Monte Freeze.

“This funeral home is a gift from the diocese,” said managing director Jesch. Miller explained that because it is a nonprofit entity, “We, as Catholics, own this funeral home.” He added, “We have been diligent in keeping prices as low as possible … Families will be pleasantly surprised.” He also noted that pre-planning arrangements made elsewhere can be transferred to Divine Mercy. “That’s been the number one question.”

According to its mission statement, “Since 1873, it has been the sacred mission of Catholic Cemetery and now the Divine Mercy Funeral Home to...”
The response from visitors to the Saturday open house was very positive. Marlene and John Deisert, parishioners at St. Charles Borromeo, thought the facility was “excellent” and liked the artifacts. Teresa Walker admired the passages from sacred Scripture on the walls. Emma Momper noted the artwork, and its appropriateness to the name of the funeral home. “He died for us, and His mercy is there,” she said. Jo Ella and Don Gregg thought the facility was “absolutely beautiful,” with a pleasant and relaxing atmosphere.

Carol and Carl Herman have been watching progress on the facility and declared themselves “very impressed” with the end result. Cathedral parishioner Richard Wade said, “I’ve been wanting this for years. I’m very supportive. I’m spreading the word … everything is done properly and with reverence.”

Mayor Tom Henry, Schenkel Construction and its workers and contractors, the professional staff and board of directors of Divine Mercy Funeral Home and Catholic Cemetery, and the Fort Wayne community were also among those for whom Miller voiced appreciation.

A senior’s ‘wonderful cane legacy’

BY NICK KENKEL

Thomas Grzesiak, a longtime member of Sacred Heart Parish near Lakeville, is retired. Lakeville is Grzesiak’s hometown, and it’s there he has exercised his woodcarving hobby for several years. Over time he has become very accomplished, with his works of art including a full-size bear and huge owl, along with many smaller carvings.

Grzesiak was a foster child who was adopted at the age of 16 by Rose Culp. Culp, a long-time foster mother in Lakeville, gave a home to more than 70 babies until their adoption. From her, Grzesiak said, he learned generosity and to give of himself, at an early age.

In 2004, after several years of experiencing serious health issues and battling tremors, Grzesiak was diagnosed with Parkinson’s disease. As he adjusted to his new physical limitations, he found he could still use the talent he feels God gave to him, in a new way.

He began to carve custom wooden canes, but only when needed by friends, family and especially Sacred Heart parishioners. Grzesiak doesn’t remember exactly when he made the first one, but does remember who received it.

As a need would arise due to age, accident or surgery, Grzesiak was quick to offer to make one of his canes. No two were exactly alike, and his system changed over time because of the availability of materials and new methods he would learn. One unique cane that he made featured a Corvette handle; another, made for his 95-year-old mother, depicted a pet dog.

All the canes he makes are created and given away freely by Grzesiak. To date, at least 50 custom canes and many floral pins are proudly used and worn by people in the area.

One of Grzesiak’s favorite stories is one that made him feel rewarded for his efforts. He shared that one time, he saw a lady who was unknown to him using one of his canes in a store. “Hey, I know that cane!” he cried out spontaneously, much to the lady’s surprise. He had recognized his work, and was gratified to realize that his creations will go on being used and passed around for years. It is what he and others refer to as Tom Grzesiak’s “wonderful cane legacy.”

A challenge in Vancouver

Outside Holy Rosary Cathedral in Vancouver, Canada, is a white statue. It sits just outside the entrance to the church. If you are walking into the church, you approach it from the side and to it looks like a real person lying on a bench. As you approach you see what appears to be a homeless person. You see a cloack, legs and so on. Then you see the feet. Crucified.

It is a very powerful statue of him.

I have to admit: I have been very conflicted about the homeless problem. I’ve seen what appear to be able-bodied young men standing on the corners in our town subsidizes a huge, and that beggar didn’t show up a person in such a situation a job ally know someone who offered apply for work there? dp. Life for us can be daunting. Paul is clear: Hardships, disappointments, hurts and limitations will cease if we are faithful to God. The more trials and pain of earthly life will be overwhelmed by the glory of heaven.

Being with God alone is worthwhile. It alone makes life worth living. Death need not be an inevitable crisis, but a culmination of holy living.

Those who believe will rise again, with the Lord

This book, among others, discusses at length this issue. The title simply makes the point that acceptance of the God of Israel is the wise choice, a logical choice, not a leap into fantasy. In fact, the methodology technique in this book is that wisdom is personified. Wisdom is described as if this human attribute were a person, moving through the world, being available to humans.

The First Epistle to the Thessalonians provides the second reading. This epistle was sent long ago to the Christian community in Thessalonica, now the city of Saloniki in modern Greece. The presence of Christians in Thessalonica at that time shows that already the church had spread beyond its geographic origins and was becoming a factor in Europe, not only in Asia. Paul deals several important theological points in this reading. First, he expressed the Christian thought that life endures after earthly death. Such a concept was not Hebrew in origin, at least not in its purest, and more intellectually developed, origins. It was an idea in Greek philosophy, but Christian thought contributed to this idea by insisting that eternal life was intimately connected with the reality of an individual person’s acceptance or rejection of God parading the person’s earthly existence.

Second, Paul drew the link between Christ and each Christian. He favored no theme to repent. Millions of people would be executed Christians would be vindicated. Threatened in so many ways, frightened, they yearned for the second coming. President Donald Trump often says things that invite criticism. So I’m puzzled when his critics bother to attack even his more innocent remarks.

The president is charged with insensitivity for saying to the widow of a fallen soldier that “he knew what he signed up for — but when it happens, it hurts anyway.”

I don’t know whether he said exactly this, and if so in what manner. But it’s what he said, and I told ourselves, and what friends said to us, after our son Thomas was killed in 2004. He was shot while providing cover fire for his Army comrades, as they confronted insurgents attacking police stations in Mosul, Iraq.

We meant that Thomas was not the random victim of some meaningless accident. He deliberately risked his life to protect others. He was a hero.

Our soldiers do know what they signed up for, before going into combat. They are given a questionnaire about their preferences for funeral arrangements in case they don’t survive.

Thomas wanted to be buried at our local Catholic cemetery, not at Arlington, in a suit rather than a uniform. “The Army has me for five years, or until something happens to me,” he told us. “But eternity is mine.”

There are many arguments about why we send some of our finest young people into combat. They are given a legal obligation to risk their life to protect others. What else? They are given a legal obligation to obey the orders that the military gives them. That’s their job. They carry the day.

Deacon Grossnickle is lighting a candle. He says this can make people appreciate war memorials — even for the fallen who may not be Christians?

The answer seems obvious.

A deacon’s spiritual toolbox for troubled times

Deacon Don Grossnickle served the Archdiocese of Chicago for many years as a Disability Outreach Coordinator. That job tied into his work as founder of Gridiron Alliance, an organization that supports high school athletes who’ve suffered spinal cord injuries. The deacon would help these young people adjust to their new situations, and also develop in them spiritual resilience that would help them deal with their futures.

In May 2016, Deacon Grossnickle needed some spiritual resilience himself. He was diagnosed with stage IV heart failure. So how did this man of God respond to the dire news? During a “Christopher Chump” interview, he said, “I was shocked. I’m a regular guy that attends to my physician and all of the care that goes with that, so there was certainly a dark cloud that came over me from the get-go. But I look upon my relationship with the Lord as a dance, and there was never a question that the Lord was doing anything to me. So with optimism in the Lord’s help, my optimism is always going to carry the day.”

The years that Deacon Grossnickle spent mentoring young men through the Gridiron Alliance provided him a solid foundation from which to deal with his own troubles. He said, “I became intimately involved with those with catastrophic injuries, and learned so very much about how attitude and a faith life can take us back from what I would call a Humpty Dumpty kind of great fall, to have the ability to respond and transform our life with the help of God and the Holy Spirit. I think resilience is a toolbox that you begin practicing in earnest when the chips are down... it really comes down to permeating life, and one end of the boys taught me that every day can be a gift, if that’s what we choose to make it. And like The Christophers, it’s all a matter of lighting the candle and being realistic about the darkness. But being smart enough, wise enough, and gifted enough to move through it by lighting the candle.”

Deacon Grossnickle is lighting that candle for others by giving seminars to his fellow patients who may not have the family and friends that he has around him. He would also like to see the church develop ministries for people who receive bad health news. “Folks tell me that as little as 40 percent of the people who are diagnosed with my kind of condition or cancer or others, reach out,” he explained. “The oppression that comes from bad news limits their verve, their strength, and they’re kind of lost. So I feel like that gap needs to be bridged. They probably won’t do it on their own. They probably need folks like me and others to press the opportunities that might be there to lift them up.”

Thankfully, Deacon Grossnickle’s story has a happier ending than he expected. Shortly after recording our interview, he shared the news that his Level IV heart failure had reversed to Level I. His doctor explained that this kind of reversal is extremely rare, and he even sent him for two consults to make sure the new diagnosis was accurate. It was. Deacon Grossnickle credits his doctors and better eating and exercise choices with improving his health. And, of course, he is grateful to God for listening to the prayers of all his loved ones who stroked heaven on his behalf.

that God established for life,” Emily said.

Food is meant for fellowship, which means we must open the doors of hearts and homes. Emily writes. Making a distinction between entertainment and hospitality can help us more readily swing open the front door. “Entertainment is about impressing people. Hospitality is about loving people.”

Entertainment is for Instagram. Hospitality is for every real-world, road-weary Christian. “Letting people into your home when you know it’s not perfect is a call to do yourself and to love the other,” Emily said. “I have never regretted answering that call.”

These days, she’s reminding herself that she can care for her body but not control it. She is trusting in God’s plan even though it does not make sense right now.

She will gather with loved ones this Thanksgiving and count her blessings, and even if she’s feeling empty, she will look for the abundance in her midst. “The Catholic table is located at The Lord’s Supper. Under this feast of delicious food and wine, surrounded by friends and lively, joyful conversation, people receiving the gift of food and making a gift of themselves through conversation,” she said.

After Harvey, faith fuels Houston fans; team wins World Series

BY JAMES RAMOS

HOUSTON (CNS) — Baseball bats and rosary beads were the only thing on Tonya Killian’s mind as she walked toward Minute Maid Park for Game 3 of the 2017 World Series. A longtime Houston Astros fan and parishioner at Mary Queen Catholic Church in Friendswood, Killian was on a mission to buy rosaries custom made for the World Series by members of Annunciation Catholic Church.

Her Hail Mary attempt was a success: She bought the last two handmade rosaries for sale that day, and maybe even an Astros World Series victory.

 Tradition holds that if the parish — which sits close to the ballpark across the street — sells out of its rosaries on game day, the Astros will win.

No one really knows if Killian’s purchase guaranteed the Astros’ 5-3 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers that Friday night, Oct. 27. But nobody could have expected the wild 13-12 Astros win two days later on Sunday night, even after Saturday’s loss. Game 5 saw the two teams slug it out for more than 120 to 150 available during each of the three World Series games in Houston. The line stretched down the block with a half-hour wait just to enter the parish’s sidewalk pop-up gift shop.

Father Paul Felix, pastor of the 147-year-old parish, opened the doors to the historic church for all to visit Oct. 27. He beamed as visitors milled in and out. Inside, dozens stopped for a quiet moment of prayer before heading into the ballpark for the game.

Earlier that day, Lance McCullers, former MLB pitcher, lit a few candles inside the church for his son Lance McCullers Jr., a pitcher for the Astros. McCullers Jr. was crucial during the 2017 American League Championship against the New York Yankees and helped send the Astros to their second World Series.

Father Felix said the World Series was a prime time to evangelize the culture with the rosary, especially during the centennial of the Marian apparitions at Fatima.

His collar seemed to garner a double-take every few minutes or the occasional genial nod from the tens of thousands of baseball fans decked out in their team colors who streamed by the church.

Between blessing rosaries, Father Felix stopped to greet parishioners and the non-Catholics who have come to know him and his parishioners throughout the baseball season. The parish has been selling rosaries outside their front door all year long to help raise funds for parish renovations.

The church, designed by Nicholas J. Clayton, is the oldest surviving and continuously used church building in the Archdiocese of Galveston-Houston and is need of repair. Father Felix encouraged visitors to help recognize history and join the effort to help renovate the church.

Inscribed around the base of the baptismal font is a catechetical reflection on Pope St. Leo the Great’s words on baptism written by Pope Sixtus III, who shepherded the church during the years 432-440. The same reflection is engraved on the baptistry of the Basilica of St. John Lateran in Rome. The baptistery at St. John Lateran was the first to be constructed after the Emperor Constantine granted freedom of worship to Christians in 313.

The inscription reads, in both Latin and English: “Hope for the Kingdom of Heaven, you who are reborn in this font. Eternal life does not await those who are only born once. This is the spring of life that waters the whole world, taking its origin from the Wounds of Christ. Sinner, to be purified, go down into the holy water. It receives the unregenerate and brings him forth a new man. If you wish to be made innocent, be cleansed in this pool, whether you are weighed down by original sin or your own. There is no barrier between those who are reborn and made one by the one font, the one Spirit, and the one faith. Let neither the number nor the kind of their sins terrify anyone; once reborn in this water, they will be holy.”

Noting the combined occasion of the All Saints’ Day Mass, the blessing of the attached community spaces and the new church’s prominent images of saints, Bishop Rhoades said each Catholic’s life as a pilgrim is nurtured not only by baptism but by other sacraments — specifically, the holy Eucharist as food for the journey and reconciliation to help Catholics return to the right path. That path, he said, leads to the beatific vision, seeing God in heaven. The journey involves praying to the saints for their intercession and following their example in living the Beatitudes heard in the Gospel of All Saints’ Day.

The students present at the Mass affirmed the journey. All the fourth-grade students, who had dressed up as saints to mark the feast day, processed up during the Presentation of the Gifts, and the bishop asked each of them about the saint they represented; noting that each was really a story about a pilgrimage that reached its destination.
