Church elects catechumens for sacraments of initiation at Rite of Election

Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades celebrated the Rite of Election Feb. 21 at the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception in Fort Wayne and Feb. 28 at St. Matthew Cathedral in South Bend. This rite generally takes place on the first Sunday of Lent, and therefore is celebrated on two consecutive Sundays in the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend.

The Rite of Election is the final step that catechumens — those who have not been baptized into any Christian faith — take toward joining the Catholic Church. Typically, this rite takes place in conjunction with the Call to Continuing Conversion, in which candidates — those who are already baptized — reaffirm their commitment to coming into full communion with the Church through reception of the sacraments of Communion and confirmation. This year, for social distancing purposes, only the Rite of Election was celebrated, as the Call to Continuing Conversion is not an essential rite.

During his remarks, Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades expressed joy at receiving the new members.

US House passes Equality Act in a 224-206 vote

BY JULIE ASHER

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The House of Representatives passed the Equality Act in a 224-206 vote Feb. 25.

A couple days ahead of the vote, the chairmen of five U.S. bishops’ committees said its mandates will “discriminate against people of faith” by adversely affecting charities and their beneficiaries, conscience rights, women’s sports and sex-specific facilities.

The bill, known as H.R. 5 and recently reintroduced in the House, also will provide for taxpayer funding of abortion and limit freedom of speech, the chairman said in a Feb. 25 letter to all lawmakers:

“Human dignity is central to what Catholics believe because every person is made in the image of God and should be treated accordingly, with respect and compassion,” they said. “This commitment is reflected in the church’s charitable service to all people, without regard to race, religion or any other characteristic.”

“It means we need to honor every person’s right to gainful employment free of unjust discrimination or harassment, and to the basic goods that they need to live and thrive,” they continued. “It also means that people of differing beliefs should be respected. In this, we wholeheartedly support nondiscrimination principles to ensure that everyone’s rights are protected.”

H.R. 5 “purports to protect people experiencing same-sex attraction or gender discordance from discrimination. But instead, the bill represents the imposition by Congress of a novel and divisive viewpoint regarding ‘gender’ on individuals and organizations,” they said.

“This includes dismissing sexual difference and falsely presenting ‘gender’ as only a social construct,” they said. “As Pope Francis has reflected, however, ‘biological sex and the sociocultural role of sex — gender — can be distinguished but not separated.’

“Sign the letter were: Bishop Michael C. Barber of Oakland, Calif., Committee on Pro-Life Activities; and Cardinal Timothy M. Dolan of New York, Committee for Religious Liberty.

Five committee chairmen of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, in a Feb. 23 letter to members of Congress, opposed the reintroduced Equality Act. The chairmen are Bishop David A. Konderla of Tulsa, Okla., Subcommittee for the Promotion and Defense of Marriage; Archbishop Paul S. Coakley of Oklahoma City, Committee on Domestic Justice and Human Development; Bishop Michael C. Barber of Oakland, Calif., Committee on Catholic Education; Archbishop Joseph F. Naumann of Kansas City, Kan., Committee on Pro-Life Activities; and Cardinal Timothy M. Dolan of New York, Committee for Religious Liberty.

The measure, known as H.R. 5, amends the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation and gender identity in employment, housing, public accommodations, education, federal funding, the credit system and jury duty.

“It is one thing to be under- standing of human weakness and the complexities of life, and another to accept ideologies that attempt to sunder what are inseparable aspects of reality,” the bishops said, further quoting Pope Francis.

“Tragically, this act can also be construed to include an abortion mandate, a violation of precious rights to life and conscience,” the committee chairmen added.

“Rather than affirm human dignity in ways that meaningfully exceed existing practical protections, the Equality Act would discriminate against people of faith,” they said. “It would also inflict numerous legal and social harms on Americans of any faith or none.”

The measure first passed the House May 17, 2019, in a bipartisan 236-173 vote, but the Senate did not act on the bill after receiving it. President Donald Trump had threatened to veto the measure if it ever reached his desk.

House leadership pledged to see it reintroduced in the 117th Congress. On Feb. 18, Rep. David Cicilline, D-Rhode Island, reintroduced it. Democratic Sens. Jeff Merkley of Oregon, Cory Booker of New Jersey and Tammy Baldwin of Wisconsin are expected to reintroduce a Senate version soon.

A group of faith leaders who would expand “the government’s definition of public places into numerous settings, even forcing religiously operated spaces, such as some church halls and equivalent facilities owned by synagogues or mosques, to either host functions that violate their beliefs or close their doors to their broader communities.”

The USCCB on its website posted an “Action Alert” — https://bit.ly/3dEDhXE — asking Catholics to write to their representatives and senators to urge them to vote against the Equality Act.

Some state Catholic conferences have done the same, including the Montana Catholic Conference. In a Feb. 24 “Call to Action,” it said: “Everyone deserves to be treated with respect and dignity. The Equality Act … in many ways does the opposite and needs to be opposed.”

Fellowship aims to rejuvenate ministers of US Church

BY JODI MARLIN

A visit to the Holy Land can be transformative for the faith life of Christians. Among those who work in ministry in the Catholic Church, the monumental and formative experience also finds fertile ground for evangelization.

The leadership and staff of Verso Ministries, a Notre Dame, Indiana, pilgrimage company, want to give back to the Catholic Church in the U.S. from among their blessings by showing parish ministers, Catholic schoolteachers, diocesan staff and those in nonprofit Catholic ministry what an understanding of the physical context of Christ’s earthly ministry can mean for their own spirituality and for the faith of those with whom they engage. A new fellowship opportunity developed by the company offers an academically informed monument, an opportunity to impact people’s life of faith.

That passion for ministry, Pilgrimage and ministry — Verso’s origins are rooted in both. Lichon started the company in late 2016 after feeling called to make a career change during a pilgrimage of his own to World Youth Day in Poland.

“We’ve always viewed this business as a ministry, as our calling to get people to these holy places. It’s an evangelistic exercise, not just traveling, visiting these places and even celebrating Mass each day. It’s truly an opportunity for evangelization, an opportunity to impact people’s life of faith.”

That passion for ministry, coupled with the inspiration that’s going to impact the hope that’s going to impact the faith life of Christians.

For those who minister, it’s a very personal journey, something that happens. Community health workers trained by Catholic Relief Services use the puppets to teach families about how doctor visits, hand washing and “rainbow” foods are necessary to stay healthy: Now, Thorin is reaching developmental milestones.

In Madagascar, families gather to watch puppet shows that entertain and teach. They love seeing the brightly colored puppets talk to each other, tell stories and ask the crowd questions. After each show, parents leave with new information to help their families.

Half of all children in Madagascar are undernourished, meaning they don’t have enough nutritious food to stay healthy. Parents want their children to grow up healthy and strong, and the puppet shows give them new knowledge they can use right away to make sure that happens. Community health workers trained by Catholic Relief Services use the puppets to teach families about how doctor visits, hand washing and “rainbow” foods — different colored foods like tomatoes and carrots that have important vitamins and nutrients — are necessary to stay healthy.

Frankline and Labaladezy, her husband, watched the puppet shows and learned new ways to support Thorin’s growth and development. When Thorin was born, his parents fed him different, more nutritious foods than their other children and took him to the health center for regular check-ups. Thorin is growing a lot and is reaching all his developmental milestones.

Frankline is happy her youngest son is doing so well, and she sees the positive effects of their new rainbow diet on the rest of the family. She said, “I dream that my children will stay healthy. I hope that Thorin may become a doctor or a leader in our community.” Every parent wants their children to reach their full potential, and CRS is helping make sure they can do just that.

Above, pilgrims rest during a visit to the Holy Land in 2019. Notre Dame, Indiana-based Verso Ministries will offer those who volunteer or work for the Church, in Catholic organizations and for Catholic schools in the U.S. an opportunity for formation in Holy Land sites that will culminate in a pilgrimage later this year. Below is the Sea of Galilee, which features prominently in Jesus' earthly ministry.

and example of the company’s patron saint, Blessed Pier Giorgio Frassati, laid the foundation for the Frassati Fellowship.

Accepted applicants will spend a four month period of education, mentorship and establishing community before embarking on a 9-day visit to Israel, the land where Jesus ministered and His salvific mission was fulfilled.

“We were thinking about what we could do for ministry leaders to help them re-imagine their faith or be rejuvenated so they come back with renewed enthusiasm and dedication and understanding of their faith,” said Lichon. “It’s about helping them to think of creative ways to bring the Gospel to people, to continue this work of evangelization.

“Understanding who Jesus is is so foundational to our understanding of our faith, ourselves, our ministry, of our Church. If we can transform the lives of 25 ministers, that’s going to multiply (our efforts), hopefully, when they’re back in their parishes or schools.”

Formation will be incorporated to prepare participants fully for the experience.

Participants will meet virtually for bi-monthly meetings that include activities presented by the team, Lichon and associate director of operations Stephanie Petrie, both graduates of the Echo program at Notre Dame and with master’s degrees in theology, as well as guest educators, including clergy and University of Dame faculty, may direct the learning and spiritual development as well. Mentoring sessions will take place with clergy and experienced ministers, and participants will be expected to engage in prayer and with readings in anticipation of a July 14-22 trip to Bethlehem, Nazareth, Jerusalem and the Sea of Galilee.

The three pillars of the fellowship — formation, community and travel — have equal weight and are integral in helping ministry leaders prepare for, process and grow from what Lichon hopes will be “an intimate encounter with the person of Jesus.” The community aspect is more than having people to walk with during the experience, he noted.

“Depending on their parish and their ministry, they may not have a support system. They may not have a mentor that’s walking alongside them. They may not have someone to bounce ideas off of. So to give them a cohort of people to learn from and support them and walk together with is really important as well.”

Following the pilgrimage, each fellow will present a creative capstone project expressing ministerial outcomes from their participation.

Two types of Church ministers — and the ministries they lead — stand to gain the most from the Frassati Fellowship, Lichon predicted.

“First, person who has some years under their belt, who maybe is feeling tired and like, ‘Gosh, I’m always giving, I’m always the leader, I never get to be the participant.’ This is a way to feed and rejuvenate those type of ministers.

“The other person is someone who’s in discernment mode, perhaps volunteering at the parish or in part-time ministry and considering making a larger commitment. Someone who’s willing to grown and is seeking something at this time,” he said.

Individuals volunteering or working in paid ministry positions are welcome to apply for the Frassati Fellowship, as are those enrolled in full-time graduate studies in theology, divinity or related fields. Program cost is $2,499, plus the cost of roundtrip airplane to Israel. This final cost includes a $2,000 scholarship from Verso Ministries.

Applications should be completed online at www.VersoMinistries.com/FrassatiFellowship by March 15. Finalists will be invited to a virtual interview and decisions for the 2021 cohort of 25 will be communicated the week of April 5.
School choice, pro-life measures cross midpoint of session

At the halfway point of the 2021 legislative session, the Indiana Catholic Conference and other advocates are closely monitoring and calling for public engagement on important bills that continue to advance at the Statehouse.

Last week, the Indiana General Assembly reached what is known as crossover, the midway point of the session, during which bills that are still active move from one legislative chamber to the other. This is a long session of the legislature, held every other year and culminating in the passage of the state’s two-year budget.

A major proposal to expand school choice is among the measures the Indiana Catholic Conference and other advocates are tracking. House Bill 1005, which would extend the school voucher program to middle and upper-middle-class families and increase scholarships available for all students receiving vouchers, passed the House on a 61-38 vote. All of the Democrats in the chamber voted against the measure, along with nine Republicans.

Now that the bill has moved to the Senate, advocacy in favor of the measure will be critically important, according to John Elcesser, executive director of the Indiana Non-Public Education Association.

“It will be more of an uphill battle in the Senate, which isn’t as broadly supportive of all the expansions to school choice,” said Elcesser, whose organization represents Indiana’s more than 400 non-public schools, including the state’s 175 Catholic schools. “Thus far Senate lawmakers have pulled much of the choice language out of similar Senate bills with the idea of rolling it in to the budget bill. It will take non-public school stakeholders reaching out to their senators if we are to be successful.

“There is strong and vocal opposition to these efforts, and we have to provide the other side of the story. If school choice expansion is going to find its way into law, whether it be in House Bill 1005 or in House Bill 1001, the budget bill.

The ICC supports the legislation and encourages the Catholic faithful to contact their elected representatives on this and other matters important to the Church and the common good.

“At this critical point in the legislative session, there are bills that need to be supported, and bills that need to be defeated,” said Angela Espada, executive director of the ICC, the public policy voice of the Catholic Church in Indiana. “So we are asking everyone to make their voices heard.”

A significant pro-life bill is another measure that the ICC is watching closely. House Bill 1577, authored by Rep. Peggy Mayfield, R-Martinsville, would require abortion providers to offer additional information and resources to women who are considering abortion, including an ultrasound image of their unborn child.

“The most intensely debated aspect of the bill involves providing women with information about possibly reversing a chemical, or medication, abortion. This method of abortion, which is reserved for use up to 10 weeks of pregnancy, involves the ingestion of two pills within a 24- to 48-hour period. Women sometimes change their minds after taking the first pill, mifepristone, and the legislation would require abortion providers to inform them about an option that could potentially save the unborn child — taking the hormone pill after that initial abortion pill is consumed.

Planned Parenthood and the American Civil Liberties Union, who are tracking House Bill 1005, or in House Bill 1001, the budget bill.”

To follow this and other priority legislation of the ICC, visit www.indianacc.org. This website includes access to an unrelated Senate bill during the 2020 legislative session and passed with little opportunity for debate.

SEA 148 was the only bill the ICC and other advocates during the first half of the legislative session was the overriding of Gov. Holcomb’s veto of a landlord-tenant bill that was rushed through last year’s General Assembly. Senate Enrolled Act 148 was the result of language added to an unrelated Senate bill during the 2020 legislative session and passed with little opportunity for debate.

“For one more disappointment for the ICC and other advocates during the first half of the legislative session was the overriding of Gov. Holcomb’s veto of a landlord-tenant bill that was rushed through last year’s General Assembly. Senate Enrolled Act 148 was the result of language added to an unrelated Senate bill during the 2020 legislative session and passed with little opportunity for debate.

Though abortion supporters claim that this is experimental, nothing could be further from the truth,” said Dr. Francis, a Fort Wayne-based physician who chairs the American Association of Pro-Life Obstetricians and Gynecologists. “The reversal of mifepristone with progesterone is consistent with a basic scientific principle that we all learned about in medical school.

“The Church consistently stands in firm support of pregnant women and their unborn children,” said Alexander Mingus, associate director of the ICC. “We believe this bill’s provisions align with the Church’s vision of the dignity of the human person. We also recognize that this legislation is just one piece that’s necessary as we advocate for the proper support, health care, spiritual care and tender concern for vulnerable women who face the daunting challenges of abortion.”

Another effort that the ICC considers pro-life has once again stalled at the Statehouse despite backing from Gov. Eric Holcomb and a host of advocates.

Legislation that would have required employers to provide women with reasonable accommodations during their pregnancy — adjustments as simple as offering them more frequent breaks or access to appropriate seating — failed to gain traction.

One more disappointment for the ICC and other advocates during the first half of the legislative session was the override of Gov. Holcomb’s veto of a landlord-tenant bill that was rushed through last year’s General Assembly. Senate Enrolled Act 148 was the result of language added to an unrelated Senate bill during the 2020 legislative session and passed with little opportunity for debate.

SEA 148 was the only bill the governor vetoed last year. The ICC and others wanted the veto to stand because the legislation placed an even greater imbalance in the relationship between landlords and tenants, which in Indiana typically favors landlords. Ultimately, however, lawmakers overturned the veto.

“During a time when the pandemic has caused untold numbers of people, through no fault of their own, to be without an income to pay rent, governments should be compassionately working to keep people housed, not making it easier for them to be thrust into the streets,” Espada said. “As we move forward with the second half of the legislative session, we will always stand in solidarity with the most vulnerable among us and call on the Catholic faithful to do the same.”
Human rights advocate Sister Dianna Ortiz dies after brief illness

CLEVELAND (CNS) — Ursuline Sister Dianna Ortiz was teaching indigenous children as a missionary in Guatemala in 1989 when her ministry was torn apart in the midst of the country’s brutal civil war. Guatemalan soldiers abducted her from a garden Nov. 2, detaining her for 30 hours. She reported being gang raped and tortured repeatedly until she escaped. Returning to the United States, Sister Ortiz became a human rights advocate and peacemaker, starting an organization for torture survivors and becoming a visible presence of nonviolence at vigils and marches in the nation’s capital. Sister Ortiz, 62, died while in hospice care in Washington early Feb. 19 after a return of cancer. Friends reported that Sister Ortiz had tested positive for the coronavirus in the fall while on a trip to New Mexico. Although she had mild symptoms and was able to return to Washington, she continued to feel ill for weeks afterward. Medical tests Feb. 12 discovered inoperable cancer. Friends and colleagues recalled Sister Ortiz, who for the last year was deputy director of Pax Christi USA, for having a gentle spirit that guided a steely determination to work for justice and peace for three decades. “She was a witness to justice and human rights. So much of what she did was pretty quiet,” recalled Martha Dennis, a former member of the order and now a lawyer who is a former member of the order and now a lawyer who is a former member of the order and now a lawyer who is a former member of the order and now a lawyer who is a former member of the order and now a lawyer who is a former member of the order and now a lawyer who is a former member of the order and now a lawyer. “She submitted to the suffering that guided her in her witness to the Lord. She was a guiding force in so much of the work. Such a gentle spirit in the midst of so much suffering.”

Catholic agencies welcome access to Ethiopia’s Tigray region

NAIROBI, Kenya (CNS) — Catholic relief agencies in Ethiopia welcomed a move by the government to allow more access in Tigray, the semi-autonomous region in the north, where a military operation displaced millions and left an unspecified number of people dead. Amid increased international calls for unrestricted access, Prime Minister Abiy Ahmed announced Feb. 24 that 135 personnel from bilateral and multilateral organizations had been cleared to travel and undertake aid work in the region. Seven international media organizations, including The New York Times, the BBC and Reuters, also were granted access. “This is all that the humanitarian agencies have been seeking. They have been asking for access to the region so that they can provide the much-needed services to the people,” Andre Atsu, the Jesuit Refugee Service regional director in Eastern Africa, told Catholic News Service. JRS is one of the agencies providing humanitarian assistance in the region, where half of the 6 million population is reportedly displaced.

Family Rosary’s annual ‘Try Prayer! It Works!’ contest accepting entries

EASTON, Mass. (CNS) — “Try Prayer! It Works!” — an annual contest sponsored by Family Rosary — is now accepting entries from children in kindergarten through 12th grade who are enrolled in a Catholic school, religious education program, parish or other organizations, including home school. All U.S. contest entries must be submitted by March 25. This year’s theme is “Do Whatever He Tells You (John 2:5)” and is aimed at helping families explore how Mary’s example and intercessory prayer can help people follow God’s will. “From Mary, especially through the prayer of the rosary, participants can explore how Mary’s maternal influence can lead families closer to Jesus,” said Cardinal Charles Bo of Yangon. "Today, the riot has been severe nationwide," he said in a tweet on Feb. 23, asking for access to the people.

At least 18 die in Myanmar coup protests

Demonstrators flash a three-finger salute March 1 during a protest against the military coup in Yangon, Myanmar. Cardinal Charles Bo of Yangon called for patience and tolerance on Feb. 28, a day when at least 18 anti-coup protesters were shot dead by Myanmar security forces. “Today, the riot has been severe nationwide,” he said in a tweet on Feb. 23, asking for access to the people.

Vatican officials insist religious services are ‘essential services’

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — For believers, the ability to practice their faith and receive spiritual guidance are “the highest of essential services,” and pandemic practices over the past year have shown they are not from a situation of super-spreader events, the Vatican foreign minister said. Speaking Feb. 25 during the high-level segment of the U.N. Human Rights Council session in Geneva, Archbishop Paul R. Gallagher said, “There are numerous examples of how the freedom of worship can be guaranteed while taking all the necessary precautions to protect reasonably public safety.”

For Lent, read the Gospel, fast from gossip, pope says at Angelus

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — People should fast from gossiping and spreading hearsay as part of their Lenten journey, Pope Francis said. “For Lent this year, I will not speak ill of others, I will not gossip and all of us can do this, even more. This is a wonderful kind of fasting,” the pope said Feb. 28 after praying the Sunday Angelus. Greeting visitors in St. Peter’s Square, the pope said his advice for Lent included adding a different kind of fasting “that won’t make you feel hungry: fast from spreading rumors and gossiping. And don’t forget that it will also be helpful to read a verse from the Gospel every day.”

Family Rosary prays on CNN program marking 500,000 COVID-19 deaths in U.S.

WASHINGTON (CNS) — During a Feb. 22 evening program on CNN, Washington Cardinal Wilton D. Gregory offered a prayer for those who have died from COVID-19 asking God to “grant eternal peace to all our sisters and brothers lost to this disease. Let us now open our hearts to recall those who have died from the coronavirus.” Cardinal Gregory prayed. “Strengthen those families and friends who remain behind, to comfort one another and to wipe the tears from our eyes. May each one find peace and let the memory of our loved ones itself be a blessing.” The cardinal called it “a great honor and privilege” to offer the prayer at the invitation of Jake Tapper, CNN anchor and chief Washington correspondent on the program “We Remember 500,000: A National Memorial Service for Covid-19.” It commemorated the milestone reached Feb. 22 when the United States surpassed 500,000 deaths due to the coronavirus. Over 1,200 coronavirus deaths were reported Feb. 22, bringing the nationwide total to 500,105.
INDIANAPOLIS (CNS) — On the day his dream came true, Desmond Bane stood in front of the modest home where he grew up, wanting to pay tribute to all the people who supported him along the way.

Flashing a huge smile, the 22-year-old Bane created a video that focused on his family, his friends and all his supporters in his hometown of Richmond.

In that emotional moment, Bane thought of his great-grandparents — how he had lived with them since he was 2, how they loved him, and how they guided him to live a life rooted in faith, hard work and humility.

In the background, the video also captured a glimpse of the driveway where he had been playing basketball since he was 3, where he and his friends played countless games, and where he dreamed of playing in the NBA.

Now that dream was within hours of becoming a reality on Nov. 18 — the day of the NBA draft. Looking into the camera, Bane was trying to describe how he was feeling, and what it would mean for him — one of the 20 graduates of the 2016 class of Seton Catholic High School in Richmond — to be drafted.

“You can’t really put it into words,” Bane said into the camera. “It’s starting to hit now. I meant, looking here at the home I grew up in, being in the city I grew up in, my family here, close friends here. It’s indescribable, it’s indescribable.”

Later that night, in that same house, Bane sat next to his great-grandmother, Fabbie, in a room filled with family and friends, watching the televised broadcast of the NBA draft.

And when the NBA commissioner announced that Bane was the last pick of the first round, looking into the camera, Bane was trying to describe how he was feeling, and what it would mean for him — one of the 20 graduates of the 2016 class of Seton Catholic High School in Richmond — to be drafted.

“You can’t really put it into words,” Bane said into the camera. “It’s starting to hit now. I meant, looking here at the home I grew up in, being in the city I grew up in, my family here, close friends here. It’s indescribable, it’s indescribable.”

The only regret of the day was that his great-grandfather, Bob, wasn’t physically part of the celebration. He died July 20 after a bout with COVID-19.

Still, Bob’s photo was prominently displayed on a table in front of where Bane sat. And he had the feeling that his great-grandfather — who was one of his coaches in his youth — was with him, celebrating the dream that came true.

Fast-forward to Jan. 31 — two days before Bane returned home to Indiana as a member of the Memphis Grizzlies, to play for the first time against the team he rooted for as a child and a youth, the Indiana Pacers.

Less than two months into the season, Bane was already being hailed by NBA analysts as “among the surprises of the 2020 rookie class.”

In a game against the San Antonio Spurs Jan. 30, he helped the Grizzlies to a 129-112 win, hitting six of eight shots, including all three-pointer that he took. Yet the next day in a phone interview with The Criterion, newspaper of the Archdiocese of Indianapolis, Bane approached his strong start to the season with humility.

“If I said it was easy, I’d be lying to you,” he said. “It’s been an extreme learning curve. We’ve had some injuries and some other things come up, and I’ve had the opportunity. I’ve tried to make the most of it.”

That approach defines Bane. He played at one of the smallest high schools in Indiana and became an Indiana All-Star.

He received only one scholarship offer to continue playing at a major college — Texas Christian University — and he was named to the Big 12’s all-conference first team in two seasons.

And now he’s in the NBA, making a significant contribution as a rookie.

He has made “the most of it” at every turn, yet he deflects the credit back to his great-grandparents.

“My great-grandparents did a great job of instilling values in me,” said Bane, who makes a point of calling his great-grandfather at least once a day and usually twice.

“It’s indescribable the things I learned from them. There’s not a lot of stuff they haven’t seen. The experiences they’ve seen helped me think about life and what you want to get out of it.”

For Bane, that goal includes making the most of his Catholic faith.

“It serves as my backbone when things are going great and not going great,” he said. “You always have it to lean on. I wouldn’t be where I am without it.”

As the principal of Seton Catholic High School, John Markward has seen how Bane lives his faith.

“I am truly amazed by Desmond’s faith and passion. When he is in town, you will always see him at church,” said Markward, a member of St. Elizabeth Ann Seton Parish in Richmond.

“He is not afraid to post something about God on social media, and he prays God for his blessings. In today’s society, there are many people that would shy away from this for fear of being viewed differently.”

On the day of the NBA draft, Bane returned to the Seton Catholic gym to talk to the current students about his journey — his way of giving back for what he calls “the close-knit connection” he had with students and staff during his four years there.

“I told them I was sitting in those same seats as them not long ago,” Bane said about the basic theme of his talk. “I told them, ‘Whatever dream you have, do it, and you’ll live a happy life.’

Living your dream is just part of his approach to life. Living your life with character is equally important to him. A predraft analysis of him noted, “Bane is regularly praised for his character and approach to the game.”

“Character is huge, whether you play basketball or not,” Bane said. “The person you are will last longer than playing basketball. My great-grandmother instilled that in me at an early age. Whether it’s the janitor or the CEO, you treat them all with respect.”

Markward said Bane “has remained a humble person throughout his journey. His approach to life, how he treats others and his faith are admirable.”

Josh Jurgens, the head coach of Seton Catholic High School’s boys’ basketball team, said Banes is “always that person who wants to make everyone around him better.”

“He was the first player in the gym and the last one to leave,” he told The Criterion. “When you have that out of your best player, it’s easy to hold everyone else accountable.”

Jurgens noted his 9-year-old son, Tripp, is the proud owner of a Desmond Bane Memphis Grizzlies jersey. As a father, Jurgens views Bane as a worthy hero for his son.

“He’s an old soul raised by his great-grandparents,” Jurgens said. “They raised him right, for sure. He listened to what they taught him about becoming a better person, staying humble, working hard and being kind to people. He took all that to heart. He gives back. He doesn’t forget people or where he came from.”

Bane says he never could.

“The people who I have in my career and my life are special people. Those are the people I’ve known my whole life,” he said.

“There’s no reason to act differently because of the position I’m in now. I’m extremely grateful for the position I’m in, and I’m extremely grateful to those people around me. They’ve been following me my whole life and make me feel supported.”

Walking with Moms in Need —

Initiative asks parishioners to be Christ’s presence for pregnant women and mothers

BY KEVIN KILBANE

For Jackie Oberhausen, the idea behind the U.S. Catholic bishops’ new initiative, “Walking with Moms in Need” is clear.

“We all are our brother’s keeper,” said Oberhausen, the Walking with Moms in Need committee administrator at Our Lady of Good Hope Parish in Fort Wayne. “If we are going to proclaim we are pro-life in word, it also has to be in deed.”

That means investing the time and effort to serve as a support system for pregnant women and for mothers with children.

The U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops has asked each American parish to develop its own Walking with Moms in Need ministry. The initiative is inspired by St. Pope John Paul II’s encyclical “Evangelium Vitae” (“The Gospel of Life”) and its 25th anniversary in 2020.

Along with encouraging more pregnant women to choose life, the Walking with Moms in Need initiative also has the potential in Indiana to reduce infant mortality — the death of a child before age 1. The state and various organizations have been working in recent years to reduce Indiana’s infant mortality rate, which had ranked among the highest in the nation.

Planning underway

The bishops urged parishes to start planning their Walking with Moms ministry in March 2020 with a goal of launching it in March 2021. The novel coronavirus pandemic disrupted that timetable, forcing parishes in the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend and elsewhere to delay organizing their Walking with Moms ministry.

Many parishes in the diocese now have started the planning process, said Caty Burke, associate director for the diocese’s Marriage and Family Ministry.

U.S. bishops asked their parishes first to identify existing resources in the area so information can be provided to pregnant women and mothers with children. They then encouraged parishes to fill gaps in their community’s resources and to extend that help into the community beyond the parish. To assist the parishes, the USCCB posted information about resources and aids at walkingwithmoms.com.

The Fort Wayne-South Bend diocese also has created its own Walking with Moms website, walkingwithmomsfwb.com. It includes basic information and links to a community resource guide compiled by St. Joseph Community Health Foundation for the Fort Wayne area and to the Herrickiana resource guide for the South Bend area.

Help parishes can offer could range from spiritual and emotional support and financial assistance to providing basic necessities or just serving as a listening ear, Burke said.

“It’s a great way to take care of baby and to support mother and make sure she is being taken care of,” she added.

Parishes can collaborate to provide help. Burke noted. For example, if one parish already has a strong young moms support group, nearby parishes could refer their mothers to that group.

Parishes also can support the work of social service providers such as Catholic Charities and Women’s Care Center.

“Catholic Charities has a rich history of assisting mothers in need for the past 80 years,” said Gloria Whitcraft, chief executive officer of the Catholic Charities organization in this diocese.

“The Walking with Moms in Need initiative brings together the professional services of organizations like Catholic Charities and the support of the faithful in parishes so that, as a Church, we are accompanying mothers and children who may otherwise feel alone, scared and unsure of where to turn for help.”

Burke hopes parishes will continue the Walking with Moms ministry on a long-term basis.

Getting started

St. Jude Parish in Fort Wayne has begun gradually rolling out its Walking with Moms in Need ministry.

“We are asking the Holy Spirit to guide us,” said Amy Delaney, a parish member who leads the volunteers planning their outreach.

Pastor Msgr. Robert Schulte introduced the Walking with Moms initiative to the parish in October and has been a strong supporter, Delaney said.

After identifying community resources already in place, such as Women’s Care Center locations and local volunteers, Delaney and other volunteers found the list almost overwhelming. They are compiling community resources information for parish staff and creating a user-friendly resources guide for Walking with Moms volunteers.

Right now, however, they believe parish members can best assist moms through prayer and personal relationships with expectant mothers, Delaney said.

Walking with Moms in Need prayer cards created by the USCCB have been placed at the back of St. Jude Church, and parishioners are encouraged to take one home to pray for expectant mothers, she said.

Her organizing group also has begun recruiting more volunteers to walk with expectant mothers on a one-on-one basis during what can be a stressful journey to birth.

Getting the word out

At St. Pius X Parish in Granger, information about the Walking with Moms ministry is in bulletins and on its website and social media, said Barb Williams, a member of the organizing committee and chair of the parish’s Respect Life ministry.

Pries also have been given business cards containing information about the ministry, which they can pass out to people in need during confession, Williams said.

The parish plans to offer person-to-person support once the danger from the coronavirus pandemic has eased.

St. Pius wants moms experiencing a crisis pregnancy or challenges with their children to know help is available and that their church family is there to support them, Williams said.

Their planning group has found the biggest challenge facing women is a lack of awareness about what help and support is available, she said. Along with South Bend-area community resources, St. Pius also plans to connect women with some of its own ministries.

The Stephen Ministry, for example, walks with people as a caring friend, she said. The Elizabeth Ministry has about 100 volunteers who help women or mothers by doing things such as delivering meals, offering babysitting, doing laundry or mowing a family’s lawn while they are with a sick child at Riley Hospital for Children in Indianapolis, said Brie Milligan, a volunteer who leads the Elizabeth Ministry and who also serves on the Walking with Moms planning committee.

Sharing Christ’s presence

At least two other parishes also are far along in their planning.

Our Lady of Good Hope hopes to launch its Walking with Moms in Need ministry March 25, the feast of the Annunciation. The feast celebrates Mary learning of God’s plan for her to become the mother of His Son, Jesus Christ.

Our Lady of Good Hope plans to focus initially on helping women who live within the parish’s geographic boundaries, said Oberhausen, the Walking with Moms planning committee administrator and a pastoral associate at the parish.

They also have learned that a gap in local community resources is personal relationships — having someone there to hold your hand or advocate for you, she said. By coming alongside that woman, she added, Christ becomes present to the mother through the volunteer.

The planning committee has developed an interactive, informational flyer about Walking with Moms that can be used on the parish website, she said. Members plan to place a printed version of the flyer at various locations in their area.

The committee developed a separate flyer that explains the ministry and how people can volunteer with or donate to it.

“A lot of times,” Oberhausen said, “there are people who want to do something but they don’t know what they want to do. They just need to be invited.”

They plan to send out a separate flyer that explains the ministry and how people can volunteer with or donate to it. "A lot of times," Oberhausen said, “there are people who want to do something but they don’t know what they want to do. They just need to be invited.”

No one parish is going to be able to do it all,” Burke said. “But everyone can do something.”

Sisters’ Storybook Corner exudes joy of vocation

BY JENNIFER BARTON

The Sisters of St. Francis of Perpetual Adoration in Mishawaka have compiled a series of videos of themselves reading children’s books that can be viewed on the Fort Wayne-South Bend diocesan website.

The idea came about when Carl Loesch, secretary for Catholic Education, “tried to think of a way to bring the sisters to our schools,” despite the fact that in-person school visitors are limited due to the COVID-19 pandemic. He contacted Sister Marie Morgan, OSF, to ask if she would be willing to take on a project to reach out to schoolchildren in a different way. A month later, a video of St. Francis School in South Bend, allowed Sister Regina DeVreese, OSF, to respond with the first of the videos.

“We started with the Christmas ones because it was the Christmas season and we had lots of decorations up in our convent, so we had that for the scenery,” Sister Regina explained. Many of the first books they read were in the possession of St. Francis Convent, but later a collaboration with Mary Diugo, librarian at Marian High School, Mishawaka, and her daughter, a librarian at Marian High School, Mishawaka, and her daughter, a teacher at Our Lady of Hungary School in South Bend, allowed the sisters to borrow more popular children’s stories to read. The types of books vary based on many personal connections the sisters have with them. “My hope is that the recordings have for them to others, he said.

“We've heard that their children love watching the videos. I have to admit that each time I watch a new recording, I find myself smiling at the joy that the sisters convey. The videos may be viewed at diocesefwsb.org/storybook-corner.

The videos demonstrate the sisters’ deep love for God and for others, as well as their zest for life. Through the videos, students also get to see inside the motherhouse in Mishawaka, which serves as a lovely backdrop to the stories.

Sister Regina, who was placed in charge of the project, said that she has worked to bring in as many of the sisters as she could. “I think each sister has her own unique gifts and joy and personality that she brings to the video and every sister is such a delight for me to be with and watch. I’m having a lot of fun just being with them.”

The sisters who have participated agree that the experience has been a blessing for them. “It’s been really fun to see,” said Sister Lissetta Gettinger, OSF. “We like children’s stories and seeing the creativity that has come along with that.”

The sisters have no timeline for when they will stop making recordings, but Sister Regina noted that “our foundress’s motto is ‘He leads, I follow,’ and I had no idea this project was coming; I had no idea what it would become, so we’re just going along with it as it happens.”

While the sisters enjoy reading the fun children’s stories, they say that the greater purpose behind the videos is to show young people bits of the convent and aspects of the religious life. Sister Regina commented, “If kids aren’t seeing sisters, they might not think it’s a possibility to give their life to God. Hopefully, that awakens the desire in them to give their life to God, or even just to listen to Him and pray more often or grow in their friendship with Jesus.”

Loesch has long felt blessed by his many personal connections with the Sisters of St. Francis and wanted to bring the love that he has for them to others, he said. “My hope is that the recordings of sisters reading stories may in a small way help children to connect with the sisters, to share their joy and to see the beauty of a vocation well lived.”

Sister Mary Bosco Davis, OSF, takes great pleasure in reading stories for young children’s enjoyment. She and her fellow Sisters of St. Francis of Perpetual Adoration in Mishawaka have compiled a series of videos of themselves reading children’s books that can be viewed on the Fort Wayne-South Bend diocesan website.

The annual Mother Theodore Guerin Award, given to two administrators during the You Can Lend a Hand Luncheon each year, honors a principal on one side of the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend who embodies the Christ-focused tenacity of St. Mother Theodore Guerin, administrator of the first Catholic school established in the diocese in 1846.

In lieu of public recognition at the annual January luncheon, which was canceled due to the pandemic, 2021 recipients of the Mother Theodore Guerin Award – Jennifer Veldman of Holy Family School, South Bend, and Robert Sordelet of St. Charles Borromeo School, Fort Wayne – were celebrated by their schools with decorated office doors and cards from faculty and students.

Veldman, entering her 10th year in Catholic education, is a first-time recipient of the Mother Theodore Guerin award. Being able to intertwine her faith and her role as administrator has been one of her many joys since switching from public to Catholic schools as a teacher, she said.

She began her Catholic school career with three years instructing kindergartners at Christ the King School in South Bend. Veldman transitioned to a kindergarten position at Holy Family in 2015 and also expressed interest in the work of Joseph Miller, a certified administrator who was at Holy Family at the time. Seeing precisely the path Veldman was anticipating, Miller created an assistant principal position and hired her.

“It’s honestly divine intervention at its best,” Veldman marveled. “God puts the right people in your life at the exact moment they need to be.”

When Miller became the administrator at St. Adalbert School in South Bend in 2017, Veldman accepted a role as Holy Family interim principal for the six months; she is now in her fourth year as principal at Holy Family.

Some of her fondest memories and favorite experiences come from the simple joys of being a principal, she said, “any day that I can go into a classroom and read a book or be a part of their lesson. The best thing for me is to make it personal. To really get to know your students and staff is ultimately what makes the building thrive.”

“I absolutely love every moment. Through prayer and hard work and determination, you wake up the next day and are ready to take it on.”

Colleagues of Veldman commended her ability to support her students, teachers, faculty and staff while keeping Christ at the center of all they do. “She is a wonderful example of serving others with determination, commitment and passion and courage,” praised St. Anthony de Padua School principal Karen Bogol. “We are blessed to have her as a colleague and an advocate for our Catholic school community.”

Sordelet, a second-time recipient of the award, welcomed the opportunity of receiving the honor so he could highlight the graciousness and service of the community at St. Charles Borromeo and the faithfulness of the parochial community. “No matter what we need, they continually support the mission of the school.” The students he has worked with have been continual sources of joy and inspiration for him, he said. “There’s a joy to their lives, and it’s beautiful.”

Sordelet is a legacy at St. Charles Borromeo, being part of a continued family presence at the school and parish. One of his mentors and pillars as an administrator has been Sister Genevieve Raupp, OSF, whom he had first met as a fifth grade student.

He graduated from Bishop Dwenger High School and found himself pursuing his education in New Mexico on the Navajo reservation, teaching high school students during the week and playing “a lot of basketball” with residents on his weekends.

He took a position teaching English conversation in Japan for a year and returned to the Fort Wayne area to serve as a teacher at New Haven’s St. John the Baptist School. While teaching – and through his first year as principal – Sordelet finished his master’s in education at what is now Purdue University Fort Wayne.

Since his entry into administration 25 years ago, Sordelet has become an advocate for school safety, a humble mentor and a common sight for both school and parish families of St. Charles Borromeo. St. John the Baptist principal Zachary Coyle called him “tireless” and “a man for Christ.” He’s grateful, he added, for Sordelet’s mentoring and guidance.

Peer-selected from the diocesan principals for their emphasis on service and leadership, Veldman and Sordelet said they are “extremely thankful” for the recognition. Yet the first thing both recipients emphasized was that each and every one of the diocese’s administrators deserve the same honor and praise.

“Everyone deserves this award this year because everyone has worked exceptionally hard during this tiring year,” Veldman said.

Sordelet agreed. “This award could have gone to any principal this year in the diocese. We have good people who have been working so hard this year to keep their schools going.”
Them’s fighting words!

When Father Angelo Bianchi, a wonderful Pontifical Institute for Foreign Missions missionary, married my wife and me, he gave us some bad advice.

Oh, it sounded good at the time, “You never have to go to bed angry,” he told us in front of many witnesses.

What my wife and I learned over many years of marriage was just the opposite: When you are angry, go to bed. The odds are, things will look different after a good night’s sleep. And if there is still an argument to be had, it will likely be at a lower volume.

Maybe this advice won’t work for everybody. Maybe I’m the only husband who gets cranky when he’s tired, but I doubt it. I’ve been thinking about anger and fights lately. We pass four years we saw a lot of fighting on a playground. The snark and the bile, the anger and fights lately. We have some bad advice.

As bystanders watched this happening unfold, they were reminded of God’s word in the Scriptures. The Lord’s actions reminded them of God.

They do not fully comprehend the Lord’s words and actions because they are not perfect; nothing less, but nothing more.

Reflection

Lent reminds us of our humanity, but, everlastingly, it is hard for humans to admit their human limitations. Admitting our limitations frightens us and puts us in our place.

To compensate, we celebrate our inadequacies. He forgives us and redeems us. He gives us Jesus, the Son of God, as our Savior. How do we attain this blessing? In the Ten Commandments. God gave us the pattern of our lives. Obey the Commandments.

The Ten Commandments: God’s pattern for our lives

As the flight was underway and the people wandered across the bleak Sinai Peninsula in search of the land God had promised, they were convicted of their sins, and gave to the people, what long has been called the Ten Commandments.

By observing these commandments, the people fulfilled their obligations under the Covenant and also found the path to peace and justice in life given by God, a path that they themselves could not have devised.

St. Paul’s First Letter to the Corinthians supplies the second reading. For people living in the first century A.D., the proclamation and the delification of a convicted felon was hard to accept. The Jews, suffering under Roman oppression and enduring so much, were not so apt to revere Roman law or to see prosperity, wealth, and justice in the system established to enforce Roman law. Corinth’s Christians, however, many of whom had been pagans, regarded Roman jurisprudence to be supremely wise. Yet, a Roman court tried and convicted Jesus of high treason.

The consequence of treason, again as set forth in Roman law, was death by crucifixion — for persons who were not citizens of Rome.

Paul asserts that Jesus, the convicted felon, is the key to salvation. He admits that this reality is a “stumbling block for the Jews, and an absurdity for the Gentiles. It was glorifying a condemned convict.”

For its Gospel reading, the Church this weekend furnishes us with St. John’s Gospel. This reading recalls the time when Jesus, shortly before Passover, entered the temple precincts and found a brisk traffic underway in the things needed for ritual sacrifice.

Furious, as described by this Gospel, the Lord drove the merchants away. He then predicted that the temple would fall — in all a virtual blasphemy — and then made the astonishing announcement that he would rebuild the colossal structure in three days.

It had taken many people many years to build the temple in the first place. Scholars and leaders later used this occasion to argue that Jesus was a blasphemer and a troublemaker.

The reading establishes Jesus as God’s representative agent. As bystanders watched this happening unfold, they were reminded of God’s word in the Scriptures. The Lord’s actions reminded them of God.

They do not fully comprehend the Lord’s words and actions because they are not perfect; nothing less, but nothing more.
A wrought-iron meditation

Occasionally, it helps to remember our humanness. It helps to recall the fragility of our nature that need to simply breathe. The healthy bluster of team spirit aside, it helps, at times, to recognize the fragile flags and banners to recognize, in all humility, the interdependence of our existence on this spinning planet because the journey we take through the universe is one we take together.

I write these thoughts as a pandemic leaves a trail of emptiness and loss across the globe; heightening our awareness of the tenuous nature of existence; causing us to take stock, wait and re-imagine our future in a way I’ve never expected. It is as if my personal dictum that every aesthetic experience informs all subsequent human experiences is being put to the test, causing me to search through my visual memory for images capable of resonating with my need to cope.

Spending seemingly endless days in a masked dance of awkward social distance, I find my formative years rushing suddenly to mind as I work and teach in a way I’ve never thought of before. I am reminded of how I came to be formed with weapons, tools and functional forms across many cultures, wrought iron, or “worked iron,” has been a utilitarian standard since 500 B.C. Iron used in the wrought-iron process is low in carbon content and more fibrous than cast iron, which cannot be formed with a hammer.

Wrought-iron work can be as small as a nail and as large as a city gate. Beyond its intended use, it often consists of twisting, turns and flourishes that are at once functional and ornamental. Occasionally, a master metal worker smith a figurative work. Artists who craft Crucifixes have been doing so for centuries. Due to the difficulty of maintaining control of a large piece of white-hot iron, most are small, 14 cm to 50 cm, but in the hands of skilled artisans, as with the figure of Christ in front of me, such objects carry an aesthetic weight well beyond the gravitational pull of the material.

Dating between A.D. 1780 and A.D. 1820 in the figure is clearly European, most likely forged in the Netherlands, where it appeared in an estate sale. The corpus is 30 cm wide from head to foot. The outstretched arms extend the form to 38 cm with the hands 25 cm apart. Forged independently of a cruciform support, the artist, most likely a master blacksmith, provided a welded loop from which the cor- ners can be hung. It is possible, and perhaps unknown whether the cross on which this corpus hung was initially wrought iron or wood. It would have been a number of red-hot metals to secure the heat-drenched metal as it was shaped; constantly turning and hammer- ing, reheating and tooling. The body, arms, legs and head are wrought-iron sculpture of the Crucifixion, a ubiquitous symbol in Catholic practice, many depictions of the Christ crucified are overtly sensual and reflects the pre-Roman world.

AS the sculpture reveals, occasionally ... it helps to personally recognize our shared vulnerability; to gather strength to reach through the veil of human suffering, and, in so doing, touch at least one hand, so that none may journey through life alone. I can think of no better salve, no better word, and no better image to help heal the loss laid before us.

one of all piece. Once a bar of iron, it was heated in the forge split with hammer and chisel to create arms and legs and then slowly cooled, then the hair, crown of thorns and the cloth around Christ’s mid-section were added after the body was complete.

The figure’s rich, burn-umber hue aside, what is most striking about this sculpture is the face. The head is long and crowned with a halo of hair that curls around the ears and thorns. The blacksmith’s focus is to reclaim the moment following Christ’s last breath. With His head turned, face sagging at a 45-degree angle to the direction of the body, Christ’s suffering has passed. With eyes swollen and closed, Christ’s hair, matted and looped down and across His shoulders, is delicately tooled. His head, scraping the mid of His chest, is full and reminiscent of those early scenes of the crucifixion found in Romanesque paintings and sculptures of 11th century.

A ubiquitous symbol in Catholic practice, many depictions of the Christ crucified are overtly sensual and reflects the pre-Roman world.

Regardless of who imagines control of the Christian narrative, the image of Christ’s crucifixion endures for the whole, cross-cultural, boundary-jumping reason: All of us will suffer in life, and yet, it need not consume us. Suffering is present at each person’s birth and walks with us, accompanied by hope and strength, all of our days. If we, like the Christ, find the courage to set aside our protective barriers and see our own face in the experience of others, then we will endure.

As the sculpture reveals, occasionally ... it helps to personally recognize our shared vulnerability; to gather strength to reach through the veil of human suffering, and, in so doing, touch at least one hand, so that none may journey through life alone. I can think of no better salve, no better word, and no better image to help heal the loss laid before us.

Gomez: U.S. bishops’ working group set up last November

BY JULIE ASHER

WASHINGTON (CNS) — A special working group of the U.S. bishops formed last November to deal with conflicts that could arise between the policies of President Joe Biden, a Catholic, and church teaching has completed its work.

Archbishop Jose H. Gomez of Los Angeles, president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, as a follow-up to a February memo he sent to the U.S. bishops, announced in a March 1 memo that there will be areas where we will agree and work closely together and areas where we will have principled disagreement and strong opposition," he said. "As with every administration, there will be areas where we will work with the church and others of good will" to “address the complicated cultural and economic factors that are driving abortion and discouraging families.”

For the U.S. bishops, the “continued injustice of abortion” remains the “preeminent priority,” Archbishop Gomez said, but “preeminent” does not mean only. “We have deep concerns about many threats to human life and dignity in our society.”

As for developing a document on “eucharistic coherence,” as Archbishop Gomez called it, he said this recommendation has been “forwarded to the Committee on Doctrine in the hope that it will strengthen and deepen an understanding and deepen a common faith in the gift that has been given to us in the Sacrament of the Altar.” The reference to “eucharistic coherence” may reflect a growing concern among the bishops regarding Catholic understanding and practice regarding the sacrament.

While there has been fierce debate in some circles, including among bishops, over the reception of the Eucharist when one is not in accord with Church teaching, there also is a deep concern about polling that suggests a confusion or lack of understanding about the Real Presence in Catholic belief and practice.

Archbishop Gomez announced the establishment of this special working group at the end of the public portion of the U.S. bishops’ fall general assembly Nov. 16-17, which was held completely online because of the pandemic.

He named Archbishop Allen H. Vigneron of Detroit, USCCB vice president, to head up the group to address issues surrounding the election of a Catholic president and policies that may come about that would be in conflict with Catholic teaching and the bishops’ priorities.

Other members were the chairmen of USCCB committees focused on various policy areas.

“We are facing a unique moment in the history of our country” with the election of Biden, only the second Catholic to become president, Archbishop Gomez said in announcing the group. “This presents certain opportunities but also certain challenges.”

Biden has indicated his faith commitments “will lead to certain policies that we favor,” Archbishop Gomez said, such as immigration, aid to refugees and the poor, racial justice and climate change, but he supports Roe v. Wade and has said he favors repeal of the Hyde Amendment.

The archbishop said that the bishops held deep concerns about “many threats to human life and dignity in our society,” including euthanasia, the death penalty, immigration policy, racism, poverty, care for the environment, criminal justice reform, economic development and international peace.

He also expressed hope the incoming administration “will work with the church and others of goodwill” to “address the complicated cultural and economic factors that are driving abortion and discouraging families.”

into the Church during the upcoming Easter Vigil. He elaborated on God’s fatherly love for His children and the unique way that Christians relate to God as a Father.

“In the early Church, the Lord’s Prayer was not revealed to catechumens until immediately before their baptism. This was because they would not presume to say the Our Father until they received adoption as God’s sons and daughters. Divine sonship is not part of our human nature. We need to be reborn to heavenly life through the power of Christ the Son in order to have that dignity of sonship.”

Bishop Rhoades said he has “always been very interested” in understanding how non-Christians view God. He has spoken to Jewish rabbis and Muslim imams about the subject. Neither faith tradition professed to connect with God “in the sense of deep personal intimacy” in the manner that Christians do.

“I mention this because we often don’t realize how remarkable it was that Jesus taught the disciples to address God so intimately and affectionately as Abba – Dad.

“So catechumens, how wonderful it will be when you pray the Our Father and address God as ‘Our Father’ after you are baptized, after you become His adopted children!”

The Gospel passage told the story of Jesus teaching His disciples to pray the Our Father, and Bishop Rhoades expounded on the many aspects of the well-known prayer and what it means to a full member of the Catholic Church to pray it, particularly in relation to the sacraments.

“Catechumens, baptism will be a new beginning in your life, calling God Father in a new way. Throughout the rest of your life, the Christian life, you will grow in this relationship with God our Father through Jesus, the Son, who at baptism becomes your brother. You will grow through your incorporation into His Body, the Church, the community of faith, hope, and love, the community instituted by Christ, the seed and beginning of His Kingdom.”

He concluded by expressing his hope that the elect would also “be close to the woman who was ‘full of grace,’ our Immaculate Mother Mary.”

Deacon Jim Tighe assisted the bishop during the Fort Wayne rite, presenting each parish’s Book of the Elect for the bishop’s signature. In South Bend, Deacon Frederick Everett filled this role. As known as the elect, those seeking baptism can joyfully anticipate their entrance into the Catholic Church throughout the final few weeks of their preparation.

Kayla Wilhelm, who will be joining the Church at St. John the Baptist Parish in Fort Wayne, attended the Rite of Election with her godmother, Mimi Dietrick. She expressed her eagerness to become Catholic at Eastertime.

Wilhelm came to experience the fullness of the Catholic faith while doing observational training for her teaching degree at St. John the Baptist School. She stated that she enjoyed the atmosphere at the school and experiencing the faith life of those around her. She chose Dietrick as her godmother, for whom she had worked as a nanny and who is “like family now.” Wilhelm remains close to Dietrick’s children, while Dietrick expressed her own love for Wilhelm’s child.

“If I have to be tied to anyone as a Catholic role model for the rest of my life, I want it to be her,” Wilhelm said.

Raymond Gichohi proudly anticipates the moment his son and daughter, Kylan and Sian Gitahi, will be baptized and receive first Communion and confirmation in the Catholic Church at Easter. Both of the children are very excited. Baptism, Gichohi stated, is “the building block” of faith and family life. He brought his family to America from Kenya five years ago to seek a better life and they are now members of St. Pius X Parish in Granger.
