By Jennifer Barton

As the new year began, so also did the yearly rounds of pastoral visits, as Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades started his annual high school visits at Bishop Luers High School in Fort Wayne on January 5. No inclement weather delayed his visit this year, as it had in previous years, and the bishop was pleased to continue celebrating the Christmas season at the first all-school Mass of the new year at Bishop Luers. The day also fell on the feast day of St. John Neumann, the first American male saint and founder of the first Catholic school system in the U.S., which the bishop considered appropriate.

Bishop Rhoades began Mass by blessing the newly renovated gymnasium. Additionally, five female students were confirmed in the course of the Mass. He welcomed their families and godparents, thanking them for coming to the special day. Four priests concelebrated Mass: Father Andrew Budzinski, Father Nathan Maskal, Father Dave Ruppert and Bishop Luers’ co-chaplain Father Patrick Hake. Three of them represented feeder schools, the largest of which is St. John Neumann.

In his homily, Bishop Rhoades gave students a short introduction to St. John Neumann, the “Little Bishop” from Bohemia, before expounding on the day’s reading from 1 John. “A major theme of the letter is that a genuine Christian life must be a life of love; love for God and one another. It is not enough that we say we love God; we must demonstrate that love through real and concrete action toward our brothers and sisters,” he said.

He continued by explaining how the love of God is most powerfully seen in the Trinity, in that three Persons are united in One. “When we profess our faith in the Trinity, we are professing that we believe what St. John teaches: that God is love. That is God’s innermost secret that he has revealed to us. It is an astounding truth. “The Christian faith is pretty shocking when you think about it: God’s magnificent plan to share in His life of love with us. God opens His heart to us and invites us to share in His own divine life. He did this by taking on our flesh. In Jesus, God bound Himself to us in love. He established a new and eternal covenant with humankind through Jesus Christ. He did this through His death on the cross. When we receive the Holy Eucharist, we enter into communion with God, and this communion with God also unites us with each other.”

He went on to speak about the Gospel reading in which Jesus walked on water and calmed the storm. “I think that is like our life. I’ve had storms in my life, perhaps you have, too ... I find in my life when there are storms, problems, difficulties and I am feeling a lot of stress and anxiety. I just need to let Jesus climb into my boat, come into my life.”

During his visit Bishop Rhoades visited three theology classrooms to speak to students. He also spent an extended lunch with student leaders and later met with theology teachers and principal James Huth.

Students in two of the classrooms got to know the bishop through questions they had prepared in advance, learning that his favorite saint was St. John the Apostle, his favorite prayer is the rosary and that he enjoys hiking in his free time. In another class, he spoke about ecumenism, or the relationship among Christians of various denominations.

Coincidentally, one of the first students that Bishop Rhoades met when he arrived was sophomore Ellen Ronick, who had sent him a Christmas card this holiday season. He spent a few moments in conversation with her, thanking her for her kind gesture. He was also able to meet senior Nelson Knapke, made famous for the “dawg” interview he gave about his football teammates that went viral in the fall.

Huth was pleased as always to welcome the bishop. “It’s just always a joy to have the bishop here,” Huth said. He praised the camaraderie among students of Bishop Luers and their friendly, open manner toward Bishop Rhoades. “They greet him warmly, they handshake, they hug ... I think the bishop being here is always a fun day. The kids enjoy it, you can see it in their eyes. The message that he brings is important.”

Janelle Mondragon, one of the confirmandi, stated that she felt very happy after her confirmation. Though she grew up in a strong Catholic family, she had not been confirmed in grade school because she “was not sure about my faith. I transferred here in my sophomore year. Bishop Luers helped me grow in my faith.”

Mondragon is a member of St. Joseph Parish in Fort Wayne and is now a senior at Luers, with hopes of becoming a Spanish teacher. She chose the name Valentine for her confirmation saint. She joyfully stated: “It’s never too late to get confirmed!”

Receiving the sacrament of confirmation during a pastoral visit by Bishop Rhoades to Bishop Luers High School in Fort Wayne were, from left, Marycruz Soto, Anahi Hernandez, Ashley Leon-Maldonado, Janelle Mondragon and Karla Estrada.

BY KURT JENSEN

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The 49th annual national March for Life — with a rally on the National Mall and march to the Supreme Court Jan. 21 — will go on as scheduled this year amid a surge in the omicron variant in the nation’s capital.

Outdoor events are not affected by the District of Columbia’s vaccine mandate for indoor gatherings, but participants should expect to wear face masks.

Indoor events associated with the annual march will have to comply with the city COVID-19 restrictions.

The national Pro-Life Summit, sponsored by Students for Life, is also scheduled to take place Jan. 22 at Washington’s Omni Shoreham Hotel. The event will feature former Vice President Mike Pence as its keynote speaker.

Pence has been a frequent March for Life speaker, and in 2020, he introduced President Donald Trump at the event’s rally.

The March for Life has canceled its three-day Pro-Life Expo and is combining two planned Capitol Hill 101 panel discussions Jan. 20 into a single event. The organization is still holding its annual Rose Dinner Gala.

Participants who are 12 and older attending the panel discussion or dinner will have to provide proof of receiving one COVID-19 vaccination by Jan. 15, or, if they are seeking a medical or religious exemption, they must have proof of a negative COVID-19 test within 24 hours of the event.

The Pro-Life summit is also requiring proof of COVID-19 vaccination for attending the city’s regulations. The summit, which in previous years has drawn more than 2,000 high school and college students, notes on its website that it is accepting vaccine exemptions “for a strongly (or sincerely) held religious belief ... in writing or orally” and it also requires masks at all events.

March for Life never projects attendance figures, but an informal survey by Catholic News Service of a few groups planning to attend this year’s march indicates that the turnout may approach pre-pandemic levels.

Last year’s march was turned into a virtual event due to the pandemic and the violence at the Capitol on Jan. 6. Only an invited group of 80, joined midway by more than 100 others, marched from the nearby Museum of the Bible to just behind the Supreme Court. It was the first outdoor event in Washington since the Capitol violence, with both the Capitol and Supreme Court surrounded by high fences.

In previous years, total attendance for the rally and march up Constitution Avenue was estimated to be as high as 100,000.

“We have nearly 250 students and faculty headed to D.C.,” said Ed Konieczka, assistant director of university ministry at the University of Mary in Bismarck, North Dakota. “That is five full buses — our largest contingent since leading the march in 2017.”

However, the Diocese of Manchester, New Hampshire, decided in December that the COVID-19 risk was too high to sponsor a bus caravan.

Bevin Kennedy, diocesan secretary for communications, cited “the difficulty of monitoring and mitigating the COVID risk with a group of more than 100 participants.”

The march is held annually on a date near the anniversary of the Supreme Court’s Roe v. Wade decision, which legalized abortion.

The first march was held Jan. 22, 1974, organized by Nellie Gray, a government lawyer, and the Knights of Columbus.

The idea was to form a “circle of life” around the Capitol and the Supreme Court. Jeanne Mancini assumed leadership of the March for Life Education and Defense Fund after Gray died in 2012.

This year’s theme is “Equality begins in the womb.” The rally is scheduled to begin at 11 a.m. with a performance by singer Matthew West. The march starts at 1:15 p.m. after the political speeches are completed.

There is considerable anticipation that this year’s march could be the last one with the Roe decision hanging in the balance.

Later this year, the Supreme Court will announce its decision in the Dobbs v. Jackson Women’s Health Organization, an appeal by Mississippi to remove a lower court’s injunction on its law banning most abortions after the 15th week of pregnancy.

If the court rules in favor of the state law, it will effectively overturn Roe v. Wade and send abortion laws back to the states.

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — With dozens of people reported dead and thousands detained in Kazakhstan, Pope Francis prayed for the victims and for a return of peace in the former Soviet republic.

“I have learned with sorrow that there have been victims during the protests that have broken out in recent days in Kazakhstan,” the pope said Jan. 9 after reciting the Angelus prayer with visitors in St. Peter’s Square. “I pray for them and for their families, and I hope that social harmony will be restored as soon as possible through the search for dialogue, justice and the condoned good.”

Bishop Adelio Dell’Oro of Karaganda told Fides, the news agency of the Congregation for the Evangelization of Peoples, that because the government declared a state of emergency and banned all public gatherings until Jan. 19, public celebrations of the Mass are not allowed. But he, Auxiliary Bishop Yevgeniy Zinkovsky and Sister Alma Dramova, who works with them, had a special Mass Jan. 10 to pray for the victims of the unrest, which began with public protests Jan. 5 over rising fuel costs.

In his main talk at the Angelus, Pope Francis spoke about the baptism of Jesus, noting how the Gospel of Luke describes Jesus as praying and that the heavens open, the Holy Spirit descends upon him and a voice comes from heaven, saying, “You are my beloved son, with you I am well pleased.”

“Jesus prays. But why?” the pope asked people gathered in St. Peter’s Square. “He, the Lord, the Son of God, prays like us? Yes, Jesus — the Gospels repeat this many times — spends a lot of time in prayer: at the beginning of every day, often at night, before making important decisions.”

Jesus’ prayer is “a tremendous lesson for us: we are all immersed in the problems of life and in many complicated situations, called upon to face difficult moments and choices that get us down. But, if we do not want to be crushed, we need to raise everything upwards,” he said. “This is exactly what prayer does.”

Prayer, the pope said, “is not an escape route: prayer is not a magic ritual or a repetition of memorized jingles.”

Instead, “prayer is the way we allow God to act in us, to understand what he wants to communicate to us even in the most difficult situations,” the pope said.

Prayer is a dialogue with God, he said. Sometimes it is pure worship, but other times it involves crying out to God or “venting” one’s frustration.

“Prayer — to use a beautiful image from today’s Gospel — ‘opens the heavens,’ he said. “It gives life oxygen, a breath of fresh air amidst life’s troubles and allows us to see things from a broader perspective. Above all, it enables us to have the same experience Jesus had by the Jordan River: it makes us feel like beloved children of the Father.”
Immaculate Conception Parish in Auburn reverently began a series of sesquicentennial celebrations Sunday evening, Jan. 9. Led by Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades, the northeast Indiana faith community joined the bishop in raising their voices joyfully to mark the opening of 10 months of festivities commemorating the occasion.

The sung vespers service was the first official event to observe 150 years since the founding of the parish. From now until Oct. 8, the community will come together in several ways in praise and out of respect for their community’s uninterrupted legacy of faithfulness, devotion and evangelization.

During the service, Bishop Rhoades acknowledged the foundations of the Auburn parish and celebrated with parishioners its growth in faith, hope and charity. He memorialized their first priest, Father August Young, and thanked for their past, while also looking to the future as you move forward into the future as a Catholic community committed to evangelization, worship, service and witness to Christ here in Auburn and DeKalb County,” he told them.

The evening’s reading from the Acts of the Apostles focused on part of St. Peter’s speech to the Gentiles in the home of Cornelius in Caesarea. In the reading, John the Baptist prepares the people for Jesus by his preaching of repentance and his act of baptizing them.

The Lord entered into solidarity with sinners through the same baptism at which the Holy Spirit empowered Jesus’ human nature with divine power. That Holy Spirit is also with the Church and empowers it for ministry, the bishop said.

“We can say that this is true throughout the history of the Church, including the history of Immaculate Conception Parish. The Holy Spirit inspires and guides us to continue the mission and ministry of Jesus, to do what He did – to go about doing good and bringing His love and healing to all those who are oppressed by sin and all those in need of God’s love and mercy.

“My brothers and sisters, during this sesquicentennial year, I encourage you to focus on your mission as a parish, to be open to the Holy Spirit, as you move forward in faith,” he told the parishioners present. “I encourage you to reach out to non-practicing Catholics in your parish and to invite them home. I also encourage you to continue to take great care in passing on the faith to the children and young people of the parish and to help them to grow in the knowledge and love of the Lord.”

The sesquicentennial year culminates in October, when the bishop said he hopes to return and celebrate an anniversary Mass. Between now and then, other sesquicentennial events include:

• The printing of sesquicentennial prayer cards, which will be distributed to parish families and available at the church office later this month. A sesquicentennial prayer written by former pastor Father Timothy Wrozek and printed on the cards will be prayed often, including at the end of every weekend Mass throughout the year.

• A sale of commemorative apparel noting the parish’s 150 years of devotion began Jan. 1 and will continue through Sunday, Jan. 16.

• A commemorative walk from the location of the first Immaculate Conception Church, erected in 1874 on the corner of Fourth Street and what is now Indiana Avenue, to the East Seventh Street location of the current church and parish campus will take place June 25.

The anniversary is an opportunity for parishioners to show pride in their history of faith, parish administrator Father Mark Enemali reiterated recently. “We have many reasons to be thankful to God for the existence of our faith community and its impact here in Auburn for the past one hundred and fifty years.”
ICC views lawful carry handgun legislation through pro-life lens

State lawmakers are again considering a measure that would allow individuals to carry a handgun without a license — a move opposed by the Indiana Catholic Conference (ICC), many in the law enforcement community and a coalition of other allies.

House Bill 1077, which passed the House public policy committee Jan. 5 on a 9-3 vote and was awaiting action by the full Indiana House of Representatives at press time, would repeal the law that requires a person to obtain a license to carry a handgun in Indiana. So-called “lawful carry” or “Constitutional carry” measures such as this are aimed at removing the hurdles that lawful citizens face in obtaining handgun permits, according to Rep. Ben Smaltz (R-Auburn), the bill’s author.

“More than ever, the Church and all people of good will must work together to confront the pervasive culture of violence,” the bishops wrote in a recent statement. “The Church has been a consistent voice for the promotion of peace at home and around the world and a strong advocate for the reasonable regulation of firearms. (We recognize) that recourse to self-defense is legitimate but also that guns are simply too easily accessible.”

To follow priority legislation of the ICC, visit www.indianacc.org. This website includes access to I-CAN, the Indiana Catholic Action Network, which offers the Church’s position on key issues. Those who sign up for I-CAN receive alerts on legislation moving forward and ways to contact their elected representatives.

The Catholic Church opposes this bill because we respect the dignity of life,” Espada told lawmakers during the meeting of the House public policy committee, which Rep. Smaltz chairs. “In states that don’t have the combination of background checks with a license, firearm homicides and suicides go up.”

Espada, an attorney and former deputy prosecutor in Marion County, pointed to research by the Johns Hopkins Center for Gun Violence Prevention and Policy. According to the institute, after Missouri repealed its licensing law, the state saw a 25 percent increase in firearm homicide and a 16 percent increase in gun suicide. By contrast, when Connecticut implemented a licensing law, the state’s firearm homicide rate declined 40 percent.

Many in the law enforcement community consider the licensing process as a screening mechanism to keep guns out of the hands of those who should not have them. During the Jan. 5 hearing, the Indiana State Police was among the organizations standing opposed to House Bill 1077.

“We have a system that works,” said Major Rob Simpson, deputy chief of staff for the agency. He added that in just the last two years, more than 10,000 applications for handgun permits have been rejected statewide for a multitude of reasons.

Jennifer Haan, who leads the Indiana chapter of the national advocacy group Moms Demand Action and is a practicing Catholic, brought a unique perspective to the committee hearing.

“I have a license to carry a handgun in the state of Indiana, and I oppose House Bill 1077,” Haan vividly recalls icing the cake for her son’s first birthday on Dec. 14, 2012, when news broke about the mass shooting at Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, Connecticut — the deadliest school shooting in U.S. history. On Valentine’s Day 2018, Haan again watched in disbelief as a similar scene unfolded in Parkland, Florida.

“When I saw the kids from Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School begging the adults to step up and do something, that was my call to action,” said Haan, a mother of two and member of St. Thomas Aquinas Parish in the Diocese of Lafayette-in-Indiana.

“For me, this is a pro-life issue,” Haan said. “We have to protect our children.”

The Catholic Church has long advocated for the prevention of gun and other violence as part of its commitment to promoting a culture of life. Leaders of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) have called for legislation to curb gun violence, including banning assault weapons and requiring universal background checks.

Indian government reversal: Missionaries of Charity can get foreign funds

NEW DELHI (CNS) — The Indian government has restored the Foreign Contribution Regulation Act registration of the Missionaries of Charity, clearing the decks for the globally renowned charity to receive and utilize foreign funds, reported ucanews.com. “I am delighted that the Indian government has restored our FCRA license,” said Sunita Kumar, spokeswoman for the order founded by St. Teresa of Kolkata. The change of decision comes less than a fortnight after the federal ministry for home affairs declined to renew the order’s FCRA registration, citing “adverse inputs.” “We never expected that our registration could be canceled, but it happened,” Kumar told ucanews.com Jan. 8, a day after the government restored the license of the charity organization. “We are happy that the restoration of our license happened without much delay.” The congregation was finding it difficult to carry forward its charitable works ever since news broke on Christmas Day that its application for renewal had been refused. The ministry issued a statement Dec. 27 saying the charity did not meet “eligibility conditions” under the FCRA, and cited “adverse inputs” for its decision, without further details.

Pope encourages business leaders who try to put employees first

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Competition, the market system and need to answer to stockholders can and do challenge business owners and leaders who want to put the needs of employees and the common good first, Pope Francis said. “Persevere and don’t be discouraged,” the pope told 90 business leaders from France Jan. 7. Accompanied by Bishop Dominique Rey of Fréjus-Toulon, the leaders were making a pilgrimage to Rome. “I find it very beautiful and courageous that, in a world often marked by individualism, indifference and even the marginalization of the most vulnerable, some entrepreneurs and business leaders have heard the service of all and not just the service of private interests or restricted groups,” the pope said. “I have no doubt that this represents a challenge for you.”

Gospel principles of social justice and charity. “When that happens, he said, the leaders must not “try to camouflage” the fact, but they must bring it to their prayer, which is the best place “to unify the beautiful and the ugly things of which life is made up, to grasp better the interweaving and the meaning in God’s perspective.”

Kenyan bishop urges calm as tensions rise after attacks

NAIROBI, Kenya (CNS) — Bishop Wilybard Lagho of Malindi contin-ued to call to calm in the Kenyan coastal region of Lamu, but said land disputes were behind the latest attacks, which have left at least seven people dead. The bishop told Catholic News Service there is credible evidence that the attacks are being perpetrated by local gangs with an aim of flushing squatters out of ranches. Leases of some of the ranches were recently revoked by the government. The bishop, whose diocese extends to Lamu Island, an Indian Ocean archipelago that lies about 60 miles from Kenya’s border with Somalia, appealed to the government to “move with speed to issue title deeds to genuine squatters.” Earlier reports had indicated that the attacks were being carried out by suspected al-Shabab militants. The Somalia-based al-Qaida affiliate has been blamed for past attacks in the region. On Jan. 3, the number of the dead reached seven after a 62-year-old man was killed in an attack, in which several houses were burned. The attacks started Jan. 2, with the kidnapping of one person, who was later shot dead in the village as another four were burned in their house. Two other people were kidnapped, and a village elder was found butchered. Those kidnapped are usually used to identify future villages for attacks, according to church sources.

European court rejects appeal of same-sex cake case

DUBLIN (CNS) — Europe’s highest court has rejected an appeal from a Northern Ireland man who said he was discriminated against when a Christian-run company refused to bake him a cake with a pro-same-sex marriage slogan. After losing in the U.K. Supreme Court, Gareth Lee, a gay rights activist, appealed to the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg, France. No appeal is possible. Lee said he is disappointed with the court’s refusal to hear the appeal, but several think tanks welcome the decision as a victory for religious freedom. The rejection of Lee’s appeal brings to an end an eight-year legal battle between Lee and Ashers Bakery in Belfast, Northern Ireland. Lee first took legal action in 2014 after the bakery — run by a Christian couple — refused to make a cake with the slogan “Support Gay Marriage.” The bakery, whose owners are Daniel and Amy McArthur, said the slogan contravened their Christian beliefs about marriage. In a statement Jan. 6, Lee said: “None of us should be expected to have to figure out the beliefs of a company's owners before going into their shop or paying for their services. ... Everyone has freedom of expression, and it must equally apply to lesbian, gay, bisexual and trans people.”

Galveston-Houston auxiliary bishop celebrated, remembered and laid to rest

HOUSTON (CNS) — As the late Bishop George A. Sheltz was placed into his funeral hearse, a chant of an ancient prayer suddenly filled the air. His fellow bishops and priests surrounded him while they chanted the “Salve Regina” (Hail Holy Queen), a fitting send-off for the Archdiocese of Galveston-Houston and auxiliary bishop who dedicated his life to serving God and his people. Bishop Sheltz’s Dec. 31 funeral Mass gathered many people to honor his life, including Cardinal Daniel N. DiNardo of Galveston-Houston, who was the presider, and Father Jeff Bame, rector of Sacred Heart Co-Cathedral in Houston, who gave the homily. “Bishop Sheltz was my pastor, my bishop and my friend,” said Father Bame noting that the bishop, then-Father Sheltz, was his pastor while the priest was growing up at Prince of Peace Parish in Houston. “In over 50 years of priestly ministry, George Sheltz has reflected with his life, just how great is the assistance of God’s grace and goodness,” he said. “He lived his life as a sacrifice to God.”

Bishop’s reflections prod readers’ spiritual lives in practical way

BY BRIAN T. OLSZEWSKI

(CNS) — Sometimes when reading reflections, one can almost hear what the author is saying. When they are published, it’s as though the printed word is transformed into an auditory experience. That is what the reader will experience with Bishop Donald Hying’s “Love Never Fails.”

Bishop Hying, who heads the Diocese of Madison, Wisconsin, and previously served as an auxiliary bishop in Milwaukee and as bishop of Gary, Indiana, asks thought-provoking questions.

In a chapter titled “Spiritual Spending Thrus,” he asks, “How do I characteristically spend my days?”

He draws upon a variety of sources, quoting Scripture, G.K. Chesterton, Henry David Thoreau, Pope Francis and a number of saints, including Augustine, Teresa of Avila and John Paul II, as not an academic exercise but to make a point.

“The Love Never Fails” is inspirational but never preachy.

When Bishop Hying writes about concerns throughout the church, e.g., parents separating faith formation for children, youth and adults; parishes that are “lively, flourishing, welcoming and loving,” and even celebration of sacraments is done well; and living the spiritual and corporal works of mercy, he invites but doesn’t lecture.

When he calls gratitude and thankfulness “hallmarks of the mystical journey,” the reader can almost hear Bishop Hying’s words aloud:

“Let your life be more about praising than complaining, more about what has been given than what is lacking. Gratitude and humility contain the great secret of joy and peace. ... What we are searching for is already given. We just need to reach out and receive it and then pass it on.”

Numerous times he mentions his family, growing up as the youngest of six boys in a home where the rosary was recited every evening. He speaks of love and admiration for his parents and notes how their example and the environment in which they raised their sons had an impact upon his vocation to the priesthood.

In an All Souls’ Day reflection, he writes about his 10-year-old brother Patrick, who died of liver cancer.

“Going through my own sorrow and watching my parents grieve up close as a 6-year-old forever marked my heart and life. Patrick and I lost a family gradually healed through faith, prayer and the kindness of family and friends, but the experience both wounded and transformed us,” he writes.

He continues, “As painful as it was, my brother’s death blessed me. This tragic experience opened me to ask the big questions and brought me to a richer faith, gave me a deeper compassion for the suffering of others, and granted me a powerful intercessor in heaven. ... I feel that my vocation to the priesthood was nurtured by the tragic death of Patrick.”

Bishop Hying’s stories can make a reader cry, but they can also make one laugh.

In a reflection on Pentecost, he writes, “I’m afraid that if Pentecost happened today, instead of immediately going out to evangelize, the early church would have formed a long-range study committee, wrote up long plans on how to evangelize and organized countless meetings. Thankfully, they did none of that!”

In a chapter titled “Everyone is Called to Evangelize,” Bishop Hying relates how he heard Matthew Kelly speak about his book “Four Signs of a Dynamic Catholic” and that he was so “fired up” by what the author said that he ordered 5,000 copies of the book and gave them away.

“Love Never Fails” prods readers’ spiritual lives in a pastoral, practical way. They may say, “I’ve read all that,” but one can be certain they haven’t read it the way Bishop Hying presents it. They might not be moved to buy another 5,000 copies, but they will certainly share what they’ve read with others.

Giving women and men the power to choose life

BY JODI MARLIN

So begin paragraphs 2270-2275 of the Catechism of the Catholic Church, the compendium of doctrine with which Catholics are familiar. Yet somehow, long ago, protecting the beginning of life came to be seen by much of society not as an obligation, but as a choice.

In 2022 in a culture focused on empowering women, does “empowerment” mean giving women the right to take the life of their unborn child, or does it mean providing them with the means to support themselves and their babies?

Supporting a very young life is too much of a challenge, often, for women who lack the support of a husband or a community of family and friends, who struggle financially, who have an permanent or dangerous place to live or who are struggling with addiction and patterns of negative behavior.

At the time of the Supreme Court decision Roe v. Wade, Catholic Charities offered the primary pro-life options for women facing an unexpected or crisis pregnancy: confidential residential care and adoption.

According to Lisa Everett, director of Marriage and Family Ministry for the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend, the number of local mechanisms to support mothers has grown dramatically in the five decades since then.

And as the Supreme Court case Dobbs vs. Jackson Women’s Health Organization, with its potential to unleash a storm of limitations on access to abortion, is considered, hope has reigned that pro-life organizations like these will see an increase in their lifesaving work.

At the forefront

Three organizations in particular empower area women to choose life for their children:

Women’s Care Center, Right to Life Michiana (formerly St. Joseph County Right to Life) and Right to Life of Northeast Indiana (formerly Allen County Right to Life). Additionally, residential care centers Hannah’s House in South Bend and A Mother’s Hope in Fort Wayne provide single, pregnant women with a safe and supportive place to live while they plan for the arrival of their little one.

The effort to protect unborn life is also buoyed by the fundraising efforts of another Catholic network with a great love for pro-life efforts: Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend Knights of Columbus councils. The councils’ understanding that viewing their babies in the womb tends to change mothers’ hearts is why the councils have funded a dozen ultrasound machines for pro-life organizations in the area.

“That has been a game-changer,” said Everett. “Once a woman actually sees her baby, that life that is growing inside her, upwards of 95% choose life for that baby.”

Right to Life Michiana was founded in 1972 as state pro-abortion legislation was about to be expanded and Roe v. Wade was in the process of being decided. From around the kitchen table of a South Bend couple in 1972, the desire to offer women in crisis pregnancies options that preserve the life of their child has flourished. In 2019, RTLM then developed HerMichiana.org, an online directory of pregnancy-related resources including medical care, substance abuse, legal aid, employment assistance and childcare.

In 1984, University of Notre Dame professor Janet Smith was volunteering outside the South Bend abortion clinic, endeavoring to dissuade women from entering the facility. She thought, “What if there was a place to refer these young women to support and help them – not just say ‘don’t do this,’ but also provide the support they would need to carry their babies to term,” said Everett.

Smith and her husband purchased the house next door to the clinic, and together with Ann Manion, who remains involved with WCC and is its current president, the inaugural location of Women’s Care Center was established.

Right to Life Michiana’s mission of education and advocacy dovetails with that of Women’s Care Center, which today welcomes women in 33 locations in 12 states. That welcome is key; operating under Catholic principles, the centers are intentionally designed with a priority of hospitality, creating a low-pressure environment in which to present women of all faiths or no faith with information about their pregnancy and the developing child. There is also reassurance in the form of tangible help: free pregnancy tests, prenatal care, baby supplies and job and relationship counseling are available.

According to Everett, who was among the first WCC volunteer counselors, the model is really one of providing unconditional love.

“Women loved how they have been treated. Their dignity is respected: It’s a nonjudgmental approach in the sense that they are always loved and helped to see that they can do the tough thing, which might be having a baby in less-than-ideal circumstances. They can do that with the support of various services in the community and the the counselors and staff members at the Women’s Care Centers. When a woman feels loved and supported, she is more likely to view herself as capable of doing a difficult thing like carrying to term an unexpected baby.”
Parishes in the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend have implemented Walking with Moms in Need, an effort to gather the immediate resources of parishes and their surrounding communities and present them to women faced with a crisis pregnancy. A directory of parishes and their WWMIN resources is on the diocesan website at walkingwithmomsfwb.com.

“Walking with Moms in Need was an effort to involve parishes in a more intentional way in making sure anyone in the parish knew where to refer a pregnant woman in need,” said Everett. Parishes are inventorying the resources available in their immediate areas and working to make the faithful aware of them so they can assist in making those resources better known. Any gaps in resources — including spiritual and emotional support, rides to appointments or even a baby shower — are encouraged to be filled through parish efforts and awareness.

Importantly, information about Walking with Moms in Need can also be accessed outside the parish by anyone who visits the website.

“We want to make everyone aware so they know they are not alone, that there is help to support them in making a life-affirming choice for their baby,” said Everett. “There is so much help available to them.”

Residential support and friends to lean on

Over time, the residential options for women also expanded. Hannah’s House in Mishawaka, originally a partnership of the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend, Bethel College, Saint Joseph Community Hospital and Women’s Care Center, opened in 1993 and continues today. It was joined in 2018 by the similarly missioned A Mother’s Hope home in Fort Wayne.

Building on online resources like those offered by Right to Life Michiana, a website launched in 2019 by Right to Life Michiana, is the most recent effort of the single-minded, South Bend pro-life organization to encourage women in crisis pregnancies to carry their babies to term.

Right to Life Michiana has been supporting women who choose life for their babies since 1972.

Hannah’s House in Mishawaka, above, and A Mother’s Hope in Fort Wayne, at right, offer residential support to single mothers, giving them not only a place to live during their pregnancy but also assistance with job skills, employment searches, health and wellness checkups, accompaniment during delivery and more.
Extending welcome key to boosting African American vocations

BY KEVIN KILBANE

They are called vocation stories: people’s accounts of how they felt God calling them to use their faith and gifts in service to the Church, their family or to others. Many people in the Catholic Church have these stories. Others don’t have an ending yet; someone may have felt a call but never received the invitation or encouragement to pursue the vocation God placed on their heart. Too many of those unfinished stories involve African Americans and other people of color.

However, African American leaders in the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend believe the Catholic Church has the means and tools to help more people of all backgrounds complete their vocation story.

“I am very excited about the future,” said Deacon Mel Tardy of South Bend, the only ordained African American clergy member in the diocese. “I have a sense in my heart God already is working on things.”

The numbers

Of the approximately 41 million African Americans living in the United States, about 3 million, or 7 percent, are Catholic, the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) reports on its website, usccb.org. African American Catholic clergy and religious include one cardinal, four bishops, and about 250 priests, 440 deacons, 400 religious sisters and 50 religious brothers. They represent about .04 percent of the 3 million African American Catholics.

Figures weren’t readily available on the number of African American Catholics in this diocese. Some Catholics may believe the diocese already has plenty of priests from Africa. But African priests’ life experiences differ greatly from those of African Americans growing up with the sometimes-subtle, sometimes- overt racial discrimination in America. Deacon Tardy and James Summers believe a seventh-generation Catholic, Summers is beginning his final year of formation to become the diocese’s second African American deacon. Summers and other candidates for the diaconate are scheduled to be instituted as acolytes Jan. 16 during a Mass at the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception in Fort Wayne.

All are called

“Through baptism, all Catholics are called to a vocation, whether it be single or married, lay person, clergy, religious or consecrated life,” said Deacon Tardy, who serves at St. Augustine Parish in South Bend and also chairs the diocese’s Black Catholic Advisory Board. St. Augustine was founded in the early 1900s to serve African American Catholics who weren’t welcome at white parishes and is now home to people from a mix of cultural backgrounds.

Many young people begin discerning God’s call to a vocation by age 12 or 13, Deacon Tardy said. That also is about the age when some people start perceiving African American youths as a threat. The perception can derail attempts to follow a vocation call. “African Americans have been made to feel like visitors in our own church,” Summers said. He has witnessed priests hesitate to give Communion to African Americans because they didn’t believe African Americans could be Catholic. At a workshop a couple of years ago, a young African American woman recounted how parishioners at a Catholic Church had scrutinized her with the underlying message, “What are you doing here?”

To attract and retain more African American members and to encourage more vocations from that community, Deacon Tardy said the Church must speak out against racism in America and become more welcoming to people of color. In short, Catholics need to love each other better. “A big part of love is someone is noticed,” he said. “I can’t go past you and not recognize your humanity and that you have a vital role in the kingdom of God. I need you to be who you need to be for me to be who I need to be.”

To show that love, diocesan African American leaders suggest parishes and schools:

— Display images of saints of African descent and African American Church leaders so parishioners and visitors see people who look like them and feel welcome. The Catholic Church currently has no African American saints, but six African Americans are candidates for sainthood.

— Emphasize that God calls everyone to a vocation. Help people recognize their vocation and nurture their efforts to attain it.

— Recognize the gifts and talents God gives each person and encourage individuals to use their gifts. — Help children receive a good education. Young people need a strong academic foundation to complete seminary studies.

Catholic social teaching, which urges people to love and care for one another, also provides a framework for healing and moving forward together, said Summers, who attends St. Pius X Parish in Granger and is also active at St. Augustine in South Bend.

The sacrament of reconciliation, for example, allows people to apologize and repent for wrongs they have committed, Summers said. Pastoral councils, synods and similar gatherings allow church members to voice different opinions, respect other viewpoints and come to agreement. “We should be leading the charge on how do we help the world heal and how do we help the community heal,” he said.

At the same time, people of all backgrounds need to become more aware of their biases, said Summers, who worked for 40 years in corporate marketing before starting a consulting business whose services include diversity training. “I think you have to be more sensitive to when you are treating people as ‘other,’” Summers said. “Ninety-nine percent of the time, I think it is by accident.”

Likewise, he noted, “I know in my DNA one of my biggest biases is I expect to be treated as ‘other.’ So I need to stop and think, ‘Did what I hear really mean that, or is it my mind spinning it another way?’”

Broader perspective

The Church also could benefit from thinking more broadly about vocations, said Father David Jones, pastor of St. Benedict the African Parish in the Archdiocese of Chicago. The parish was founded to serve African American Catholics but now includes African immigrants and people of African descent from South America, Father Jones said.

Even with its much larger Black Catholic population, the Archdiocese of Chicago has ordained an African American priest about once every 12 years, he said. However, the response of his parishioners during the coronavirus pandemic led him to think about vocations in a new way.

In service and example of vocation to the Lord

Deacon candidate James Summers

James Summers always treasured his Catholic faith, but it took decades for him to consider stepping beyond the role of a layperson.

Summers, 70, grew up a cradle Catholic in Evangel Circles, a family whose maternal roots in the Catholic faith go back seven generations. His mother’s father was a priest, and his wife moved their family to Evansville in the early 1900s. Summers met his future wife, Wendy, while both were in college. Her Catholic roots stretch back 10 generations, so they had a strong connection. He and Wendy, who now have been married for 46 years, first lived in the Oak Park area in Chicago. “I’ve been a lector ever since we got married,” James said. “Her dad was a lector, and I really respected him.”

A job offer he received from Whirlpool Corporation brought them to Granger, near South Bend, in 1999. There they became active members at St. Pius X Parish. Over the years, Wendy and other people occasionally suggested James consider becoming a deacon. He always dismissed the idea, as he had, and set himself in that role at that time. He started to roll back his defenses after he and Wendy attended the annual Black Catholic Congress meeting in 2012 in Indianapolis. He was inspired by seeing so many Catholics that look like him and who were so joyful in celebrating the Mass. “I had never felt so included in a religious service with that experience,” he said.

He soon joined the National Association of Black Catholic Administrators. One of the association’s priorities was sharing the good news of the gospel with more African Americans. At one of the association’s national meetings, he heard some people he was thinking of entering training to become a deacon. The outpouring of support he received encouraged him.

He was also involved as a volunteer with SCORE, a nationwide mentorship program designed to aid people in starting businesses, where he mentored mostly women and people from minority communities. “In all of those programs, real contribution is to provide hope in the face of discouragement,” he said.

The work sometimes left him frustrated or disheartened, and he wondered why he kept going back to it. A friend suggested he read the book, “Falling Upward,” by Franciscan priest Father Richard Rohr.

Father Rohr describes the first stage of life as a time of filling the “container” to build a livelihood, support a family and other essential responsibilities, Summers said. Father Rohr sees the second half of life as a time of emptying the container by giving back.

James read the book just before the current class of deacon candidates embarked on their formation in January 2020. About that time, Wendy also asked him again if he wanted to pursue a vocation as a deacon. He said yes.

He asked God to let him know if the Lord really wanted him to enter formation. James thought he would be too old to participate. His answer came when Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades waived the age limit.

James is now entering his fourth and final year of formation. He would become the diocese’s second Black Catholic deacon if ordained in 2023, joining Deacon Mel Tardy of St. Augustine Parish in South Bend. “I have learned so much about my Church in the last three years, it is mind-blowing,” James said.

One of the greatest gifts of his formation training, he said, has been going deeper in prayer. Deacon candidates observe the Liturgy of the Hours, including morning prayer and a special prayer. They have become his favorite times of the day — praying and then sitting in the presence of God.

Brother Roy Smith

Brother Roy Smith and one of his sisters, Sister Demetria Smith, each heard God’s call in their youth. They responded after people around them invited and encouraged them to consider a religious vocation.

The Smiths grew up as part of a large African American Catholic family in Indianapolis. Their father had converted to Catholicism while working for the Catholic Social Justice division of St. Vincent de Paul religious order. Their mother, Sister Demetria Smith, retired as a teacher in 2009. She is a member of the Missionaries of Our Lady of Africa. Their mother joined the Church after their parents decided to marry.

Sister Demetria, 89, said she had wanted to go to Africa since seeing a photo of two boys standing on the equator in Africa in one of her textbooks in fourth or fifth grade. As a youth, she also accompanied some daughters of St. Vincent de Paul religious order who went out to care for the poor and felt a strong pull toward that work.

Missionary Sisters of Our Lady of Africa members stopped in Indianapolis periodically on recruiting trips, including at the Daughters of Charity of St. Vincent Holy Cross High School, where Brother Roy says that he considered becoming a priest.

While attending Cathedral High School, where he was a star athlete, he also began to think about working in some form of ministry. He said the school was staffed by Holy Cross brothers, and the vocation coordinator asked him if he had considered a calling as a religious brother.

By senior year, he decided to put a college football scholarship on hold so he could “try out” the Holy Cross brothers. He soon joined their team.

Both Smiths have led very active lives in ministry to the Church.

Sister Demetria, who now is retired and lives in Indianapolis, served for about 20 years in Africa, including in Uganda during Idi Amin’s rule during the 1970s. Brother Roy, who currently is development director for the Holy Cross Province in South Bend, has worked as a teacher and social worker at a variety of locations in the Midwest. His ministry also included working from 1985 to 1997 at the Catholic Charities South Bend-Elkhart office, where he served as office director for the last four years. He remains active at St. Augustine Parish in South Bend and has served as leader of the National Black Catholic Conference and is a member of the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend’s Black Catholic Advisory Board.

Brother Roy believes he is the only African American religious brother in the diocese, so he didn’t encounter any obstacles to his vocation. Sister Demetria did, beginning with many members of her religious order who did not understand that her education level and culture differed significantly from that of the people the sisters ministered to in Africa.

Deacon Mel Tardy, who oversees St. Augustine Parish in South Bend, says all are called to a vocation and the Catholic Church must develop wider efforts to help African Americans and others recognize and pursue theirs.

Deacon Mel Tardy

While growing up in the strong African American Catholic community in New Orleans, Deacon Mel Tardy, now 57, of South Bend, members being interested in possibly becoming a religious brother but not knowing how to go about it. He also thought of becoming a priest but the only priests he saw were white, so he wasn’t sure African Americans could become one.

After speaking with one man wearing a clerical collar, Deacon Tardy remembers saying, “Thank you, Father,” thinking he was talking with a priest. “I’m not a father,” the man replied. “I’m a deacon.”

When the family returned to South Bend, he asked about becoming a deacon and was told the diocese didn’t offer a deacon formation program. He turned to God, saying that if he was supposed to become a deacon, the Lord would have to provide a formation program.

“Five years later, my pastor came up and said, ‘The diocese created a deacon program, and I put your name in.’” Deacon Tardy recalled. He was ordained a deacon in May 2011 and assigned to serve at St. Augustine.

Deacon Tardy, who is the only ordained African American cleric member in the diocese, has gone on to hold numerous leadership positions. These include serving as current chairman of the diocese’s Black Catholic Advisory Board, president of the local Black Catholic Clergy Caucus and a board member of the National Black Catholic Congress. He also is the diocese’s advising professor at Notre Dame.

St. Augustine Parish remains a key part of his ministry, however, as he and his wife Annette nurture the faith in the multicultural community that inspired him.
What are the laity supposed to be?

Bishop Robert Barron

I think New Year’s resolutions are silly. Under the guise of “get better and better yourself” we establish arbitrary and often unrealistic goals to eat less, move around more, spend less time using electronics, etc.

One year, I resolved to use a paper planner to keep track of my to-do lists and meetings. I gave up the practice within two weeks because it just wasn’t a useful habit for me. But even though I knew I needed to quit, my resolution was frustrated by my giving it up.

I was then left with just one other resolution for the year: Go to bed by 9 p.m. That lasted just a couple weeks beyond the first.

In a furious fit, I resolved to never make resolutions again, at least not new year ones, because it was obvious I was waiting to make necessary changes in my life. I procrastinated the new habit: “Oh, after the new year I’ll do that” and just set the habit or task on a never-ending to do list.

“Someday,” knowing good and well “someday” was never really coming. I decided to do this with far more than just healthy eating or closet organization or bedtime routines. We set resolutions for our spiritual life a “someday” list all too often.

They sit there on that “someday” list — these hopes and habits with no real direction and therefore no real resolve. Even though we know they are noble, worthy, good practices, they simply become these platitudes with no path to living them out.

These “someday” resolutions promised at the start of a new year because it’s what everyone else is doing, are not realisations. We can put them into practice and thus develop holy habits. They’re these generalized promises made to no one, least of all ourselves, directed by the force within a person, which, in effect, is the force or good feelings is he allowing to return to their home.

Similarly, only when a baptized person is willing to give up the world, gives authority or good feelings is he breaking free from the ego, whose power and mission of Jesus as the Servant, that we must follow on one’s own path.

Finally, the laity are meant to practice detachment from the goods of the world, precisely for the sake of their mission on behalf of the world. Untying ourselves from the habit of true interior freedom from an addiction to wealth, power, pleasure, rank, honor, etc., she cannot follow the will of God as she ought. Only when the woman at the well put down her water jug, only when she stopped seeking to quench her thirst from the water of the world’s pleasures, was she able to evangelize. (Jn 4)

Similarly, only when a baptized person to seek real sanctity by incorporating those ideals. So, what would this look like?

Let us take poverty first. Though the laity an aristocratic virtue, a disorderly sexual love, is also to be followed by the Church to seek real sanctity by incorporating those ideals. So, what would this look like?

Mary’s example shows us to the glory of the Lord

Mary entered the picture. For its second reading this weekend, the Church presents a passage from Paul’s First Letter to the Corinthians.

The leading Christian Corinthians to genuine fidelity was a considerable challenge for Paul. It was a call to fidelity to the traditions and arguments in Corinth, Paul wrote what has become a blueprint for Christian judgment of people.

Each human being, a child of God, is precious. Each has special gifts and opportunities. Such diversity was welcome, since it meant that there were so many occasions for individual believers to bring the sweetness of the gospel to their neighbors. If we put into practice and thus develop holy habits, we can put them into practice and thus develop holy habits.

The people upset the arrangement by sinning. Despite their God provided for it. God had allowed to return to their home.

As a result, the exiles were allowed to return to their homeland. The prophets did not see the sequence of events leading up to this happy release as merely an escape. Rather, God had prepared the way, God promised to protect the people.

The people upset the arrangement by sinning. Despite their intentions, however, God was constant. He provided.

Eugenics, forced sterilization and protecting the mentally challenged

By Father Tad Pacholczyk

In 1924, the Virginia law allowing the sterilization of mentally disabled patients was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court in Buck v. Bell. In the decision, Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes made his now infamous proclamation that “three generations of imbeciles are enough,” referring to Carrie Buck, her mother and daughter. Carrie Buck was committed to a state mental facility.

The Supreme Court’s decision featuring Justice Holmes’ histrionic flair served to catalyze the then-trendy push for eugenization programs. The Virginia sterilization programs were thus among the first state-sponsored programs, permanently infertile by these policies. Young people or children. Although the bodies of mentally challenged residents may have matured sexually, some still function intellectually at or near the level of a child. Living in an institutional care facility is meant to offer protection from the chaos of the outside world where they would clearly be vulnerable and largely defenseless.

It doesn’t require much reflection, however, to see that if residents were taking contraceptive or surgical sterilization.

Addressing inadequate oversight to prevent the obvious consequences that might follow from such assaults, like pregnancy. Addressing inadequate oversight by caretakers and eliminating the “institutional chaos” that allows residents to be victims of sexual assault, due to their well-documented risk of being abused.

Sometimes it is argued that residents were taking contraceptive or surgical sterilization.

The real aim should be to prevent sexual assaults, not to prevent the obvious consequences that might follow from such assaults, like pregnancy.

Diocese to host synod listening sessions

The Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend opened the 2021-2023 Synod on synodality on Oct. 16 of last year, and this year will begin hosting sessions for members of the diocese to attend beginning later this month. The aim of the synod is to allow those whose voices are not typically heard to give their feedback to the greater Church at large.

These listening sessions will be held at each of the six vicariates around the diocese and will be hosted by local parishes. The first will be at St. Anthony de Padua in South Bend on Jan. 25 at 5:30 p.m., beginning with the celebration of Mass. From that starting point, other locations will host their listening sessions until early March.

Sessions are open to anyone who would like to attend and are especially geared toward parishioners in each specific vicariate. Though the synod itself is basically a meeting of bishops, Pope Francis is highly focused on bringing the laity into the discussion on the universality of the Church, and particularly would like to hear from those “on the margins.” Therefore, everyone is invited to attend the sessions and consider how the Church can continue to move toward furthering her mission. The actual meeting of the bishops will take place in 2023, and these listening sessions will provide the only opportunity that the laity will have to contribute to the process.

In his homily opening the synodal process, Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades said, “The Church has become increasingly aware that synodality is the path for the entire people of God. It’s a journeying together of all the faithful since all the baptized, both the hierarchy and the laity, are called to be active participants in the saving mission of the Church. There are a diversity of gifts and charisms among all the faithful for the renewal and building up of the Church.”

“The theme of the synod, ‘For a Synodal Church,’ has three dimensions: Communion, Participation and Mission. We are being asked by the Holy Father to be open to the Holy Spirit and thus discern how God is calling us towards deeper communion, fuller participation and greater openness to fulfilling our mission in the world.”

Bishop Rhoades reminds those who would like to be included in the process to listen to God’s Word in Scripture and Tradition, to one another and to the poor and marginalized.

Prior to the opening of the fall assembly of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops in November, Archbishop William Lori gave a homily for the Mass at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary. In it, he said that difficult problems within the Church should not be avoided, but “Rather, we must seek to know and do the truth in love.” He emphasized the need for prayer as the process began and the importance of allowing the Holy Spirit to guide it.

Some of the questions to reflect upon during the listening sessions were provided by Anne Therese Stephens, diocesan coordinator of the synodal process. She strongly encourages anyone who plans to attend to pray for the guidance of the Holy Spirit, particularly with the following questions:

• How is this “journeying together” to announce the gospel happening today in our local parish, campus ministry, university, religious congregation? What steps does the Holy Spirit invite us to take in order to grow in our “journeying together?”

• How is God speaking to us through voices we sometimes ignore? Whose voices are currently not being heard?

• How do prayer and liturgical celebrations actually inspire and guide our common life and mission in our community?

• How is every baptized person called to participate in the mission of the Church? What areas of mission are we neglecting?

• What relationships does our Church community have with members of other Christian traditions and denominations? What do we share and how do we journey together?

• How is authority and governance exercised within our local Church (diocese/parish)? How are teamwork and co-responsibility put into practice?

• What is our experience of celebrating the Eucharist? What are some ways our parishes and diocese can place greater emphasis on realizing the infinite value of the Eucharist within our Christian life?

The list of listening sessions offered in each parish’s vicariate can be found on the diocese’s website: diocesefwsb.org/synod.

Synod prayer:

Come Holy Spirit, come! O Holy Spirit, O my God, I adore You, and acknowledge You in Your divine presence, that I am nothing and can do nothing without You. Come, great Paraclete, father of the poor, comforter the best, fulfill the promise of our blessed Savior, Who would not leave us orphans, and come into the mind and the heart of Your poor, unworthy creature, as You did descend on the sacred day of Pentecost on the holy Mother of Jesus and on His first disciples. Grant that I may participate in those gifts which You did communicate to them so wonderfully, and with so much mercy and generosity. Take from my heart whatever is not pleasing to You, and make of it a worthy dwelling-place for Yourself. Illumine my mind, that I may see and understand the things that are for my eternal good. Inflame my heart with pure love of You, that I may be cleansed from the dross of all inordinate attachments, and that my whole life may be hidden with Jesus in God. Strengthen my will, that I may be made conformable to Your divine will, and be guided by Your holy inspirations. Aid me by Your grace to practice the divine lessons of humility, poverty, obedience, and contempt of the world, which Jesus taught us in His mortal life. Amen.
