Prayer ‘powerful’ tool in pro-life cause

New postulator named for Father Peyton’s sainthood cause

EASTON, Mass. (CNS) — The Congregation of Holy Cross has appointed Valentina Culurgioni to be the new postulator for the sainthood cause of Holy Cross Father Patrick Peyton.

The congregation announced Jan. 12 that Culurgioni succeeds Andrea Ambrosi, a civil and canon lawyer in Rome, who retired as postulator.

Irish-born Father Peyton (1909-1992), a media pioneer, was declared “Venerable” by Pope Francis in 2017. Known as the “rosary priest,” he served families worldwide by inspiring them to pray together daily.

He is well known for his famous messages, “The family that prays together stays together” and “A world at prayer is a world at peace.”

The Vatican Congregation for Saints’ Causes granted Culurgioni the mandate to serve as the postulator, who is responsible for managing a cause through the Catholic Church’s canonization process.

“We are so pleased with the appointment of Valentina Culurgioni as postulator of Father Peyton’s cause,” said Holy Cross Father Wilfred Raymond, president of Holy Cross Family Ministries, based in Easton.

“Valentina is a woman of intelligence, talent and devout faith. She brings much to this important role.”

Holy Cross Family Ministries continues the mission of Father Peyton by inspiring, promoting and fostering the prayer life and spiritual well-being of families throughout the world. The organization includes Family Rosary, Family Theater Productions, Catholic Mom, the Museum of Family Prayer, Father Peyton Family Ministries and the Peyton Institute for Domestic Church Life.

According to the announcement about Culurgioni, she has worked in various capacities on sainthood causes, including the cause for the late Archbishop Theotonius Ganguly of Dhaka, Bangladesh, also a religious of the Congregation of Holy Cross, who has the title “Servant of God.” Culurgioni also has been involved in other works for the Catholic Church.

“Her admiration for Father Peyton’s life and works will bring great energy and enthusiasm to the cause process,” said Holy Cross Father David Marcham, vice postulator and director of the Father Peyton Guild. “We look forward to working with Valentina in the days ahead.

“We are so grateful to Dr. Ambrosi for his many years of service and his good work to bring us this far in the process,” he added. “We wish him well in his well-deserved retirement.”

Ambrosi began his service as postulator during the early years of Father Peyton’s cause. He recommended Culurgioni to be his successor in that role.

In June 1997, the Congregation of Holy Cross requested that a cause for canonization for Father Peyton be initiated. In June 2001, the Vatican granted the “nihil obstat” – a declaration of no objection – and Father Peyton was given the title “Servant of God.” Since then, the life and works of Father Peyton have undergone thorough and minute examination.

By declaring him “Venerable,” the pope confirmed he is a person of heroic virtues who is “worthy of emulation by the faithful.”

The next step is beatification, after which he would be called “Blessed.” The third step is canonization.

In general, for beatification, one miracle needs to be accepted by the church as having occurred through the intercession of the prospective saint and a second such verified miracle is needed for canonization.

Father Peyton was born Jan. 9, 1909, in Carraccastle, County Mayo, Ireland. His parents, John and Mary Peyton, gathered their family to pray the rosary every evening. After emigrating from Ireland to the United States, Patrick became gravely ill as a seminarian and doctors offered no hope of recovery. He followed his parents’ example and turned to the rosary.

He was “stricken with tuberculosis,” said Father Raymond. “He prayed his rosary to the Blessed Mother and made a miraculous recovery. From that moment, he promised to spend the rest of his life on a special mission for Mary, bringing millions of families around the world together to pray the rosary just as his family did every evening.”

Ordained June 15, 1941, Father Peyton began Family Rosary in Albany, New York, in 1942, with the goal of building family unity through daily prayer of the rosary. He went on to lead 28 million people in prayer at 40 rosary rallies including 2 million each at events in São Paulo and in Manila, Philippines.

He spent the 51 years of his priesthood serving the spiritual needs of families. In 1947, he founded Family Theater Productions in Hollywood, which produced 900 radio and TV programs that featured hundreds of star actors and other celebrities and had more than 10,000 broadcasts.

Father Peyton’s mission continues today through 26 mission centers in 17 countries. Each mission center provides digital complimentary prayer resources on a variety of platforms for families as well as face-to-face events, including rosary rallies, days of reflection, seminars, and other fun, faith-filled events.

Praying weekly rosary at Planned Parenthood is ‘powerful,’ say students

BY DAVE HRBACEK

HOPKINS, Minn. (CNS) — Every Monday morning at 7:45 during the school year, a long line forms in the school office at Chesterton Academy in Hopkins. Most weeks, it stretches into the school entryway and out the front doors. On Jan. 3, 40 students made sure to arrive before the bell rang to signal the start of the school day.

Why? To be part of a group that, two days later, would get into several vehicles and SUVs, head 15 miles to St. Paul and pray a rosary in the biting cold at Planned Parenthood so they could make their presence felt as part of the pro-life generation.

They call themselves “Crusaders for Life,” and are led by a fierce defender of life — and Chesterton parent — Kalley Yanta, a regular at prayer gatherings at Planned Parenthood and other abortion facilities for the past 20-plus years.

Although Yanta, who came up with the idea during the previous school year and pitched it to administrators, was unable to attend this gathering because of a COVID-19 quarantine, she was there in spirit — and by text — cheering on the students and their parent chaperones.

Despite the serious nature of the abortion issue and the fight to end the killing of unborn children, this gathering, like all others, was marked by joy.

There also were occasional blasts from semi-trailers, which, in the words of senior Gabriel Schmitz, “shook the whole (Planned Parenthood) building.

“Although nearly all of the students were shivering in the sub-zero cold by the end of the final Mass Mary, their passion to fight against abortion remained red hot. The truth is, there would have been more than 40 students at this prayer gathering if Yanta hadn’t capped the list at 40 for safety and logistical reasons.

Still, that’s more than one-fourth of Chesterton’s student body.

That’s why there is such a rush every Monday to get to school early. Sophomores Claire Lelmissis and Therese Rivard, among others, want to make sure they get on the list every week. Both were part of the first group that went last school year, and have only missed signing up once since then.

“We kind of have a system,” said Lelmissis, whose older brother Dominic, a senior, also comes. “Usually, whichever one of us gets to school first, gets in line and then signs us both up. There’s always a huge line coming out of the office — big traffic in the hallway — because so many kids are so passionate about this.

“We’re a community and bonding experience with our whole generation, and showing people that we are the pro-life generation,” she told The Catholic Spirit, newspaper of the Archdiocese of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

The weekly prayer gatherings also express the school motto: “Cultura Vitae” (“Culture of Life”). This is exactly what Dale Ahlquist, school co-founder and current interim headmaster, had in mind when Chesterton Academy opened its doors 14 years ago.

“When we formed the school, part of our mission was to counteract the culture of death,” said Ahlquist, whose school, the flagship of the Chesterton Schools Network, has 150 students in grades nine through 12.

“And so, we’ve always had pro-life charism (at the school). … When Kalley came in with this idea, it just resonated wonderfully. I think our only disappointment was that we hadn’t thought of it earlier.

“At first, only five or six students went every week. Lelmissis recalled.

Steadily, the number grew and Yanta had to set a limit due to how many parent-drivers she could recruit every week. Plus monitor the students’ safety.

Yanta, an experienced pro-life activist and sidewalk counselor, knows that responses can sometimes be negative, and even hostile.

But that does not diminish the students’ enthusiasm. They brave not only occasional rude remarks and gestures, but all kinds of weather, including severe cold on Jan. 5, with a wind chill below zero, just weeks ahead of Jan. 22 — the 49th anniversary of Roe v. Wade, the U.S. Supreme Court decision that legalized abortion nationwide.

The gathering is all part of an effort to be, as Yanta described, “on the front lines, literally, of the greatest spiritual battle of all time.

“It’s so cool,” said Yanta, a mother of six whose son Kolbe, a Chesterton junior, attends the weekly gatherings, as does her husband, Jon. “It love it so much because it gives our kids an opportunity to be bold, to be the hands, the feet, the hearts, the voices, the ears, the eyes, the love of Christ on the sidewalk for these babies and their moms.”

She thinks one of the main reasons Crusaders for Life is so popular with Chesterton students is the feeling of empowerment that comes with making the half-hour trip to Planned Parenthood every week.

“Teenagers often feel like there’s nothing they can actually, tangibly do to make a difference in the world,” she said. “But this is very tangible, especially among people like them who understand the power of prayer.”

Sophomore Thomas DeKeuil went for the first time last April. He learned later that, while the group was there, two different cars pulled into the facility, each carrying an abortion-minded woman inside.

Both cars later drove out, and people inside the car told Chesterton students they had changed their minds about abortion and decided not to go through with it because of the students’ presence there. “That just really hit me,” said DeKeuil, whom her older brother John Paul, a senior, also goes to the rosary gatherings. “They’re real lives and you’re actually saving them. It just so powerful and crazy.”

One byproduct of the event is the chance for people from all four grade levels at the school to get to know each other. All are on equal footing on the sidewalk in front of Planned Parenthood, and freshmen through seniors enjoy and appreciate the chance to pray together in the fight against abortion.

It also brings together parents and students. Jeff Mitchell rearranges his work schedule at his real estate business to come to Chesterton and serve as a driver, along with his wife, Erin. Sometimes he leads the rosary, as he did Jan. 5, and often goes with daughters Elizabeth, a junior, and Grace, a freshman. In the parking lot as students gathered before leaving, he sprinkled holy water on students as they passed by, another part of the event.

“It’s great,” he said. “It’s a wonderful thing to serve Christ and to bring that joy and light into the world right here.”

Freshman Jack Berg started going in the fall of this school year and tries to make it every week. Occasionally, his older brother Fred also comes. Jack signed up just two weeks into the school year and, like DeKeuil, was hooked immediately. “It was just life changing,” he said. “It’s my favorite part of each week. I’m so thankful for it and that this school takes the time to do that.”

Berg has five siblings, and his mother has had several miscarriages, so he has firsthand experience with both the life and death of unborn children.

“When I see a baby, the amount of joy that comes to my face is unbelievable,” he said.

“And to think of that life being taken away in illegal (abortion) clinics all around the world, that’s just a dagger in my heart.”

Ukrainian priests appeal for prayers, support as Russian threat grows

BY JONATHAN LUXMOORE

WARSAW, Poland (CNS) — Two priests in Ukraine asked Western church leaders for support, especially in anticipation of a widely expected Russian invasion.

“While our TV news shows tanks and army units deployed on our borders, the war in eastern Ukraine is continuing — but the church in the West is saying little,” said Msgr. Gregory Semenkov, chancellor of the Kharkiv-Zaporizhia Diocese.

“As faithful Catholics, we’ve nothing against Russians and provide regular Russian-language Masses, while our bishops’ conference, being nonpolitical, has never taken a position on whether Ukraine should join NATO or the European Union. But these invasion preparations are posing severe hazards for us.”

The priest spoke to Catholic News Service Jan. 14 as talks between NATO and Russian officials, the first in two years, failed to reach agreement on Moscow’s demands for an end to Western military backing for countries formerly belonging to the Soviet Union. Semenkov said most Catholics believed a “major Russian show of force” was likely after the failure of East-West talks.

He told CNS that Ukraine’s Catholics were uncertain how Russian forces would treat their church in the West is saying little,” said Msgr. Gregory Semenkov, chancellor of the Kharkiv-Zaporizhia Diocese.

“As faithful Catholics, we’ve nothing against Russians and provide regular Russian-language Masses, while our bishops’ conference, being nonpolitical, has never taken a position on whether Ukraine should join NATO or the European Union. But these invasion preparations are posing severe hazards for us.”

The priest spoke to Catholic News Service Jan. 14 as talks between NATO and Russian officials, the first in two years, failed to reach agreement on Moscow’s demands for an end to Western military backing for countries formerly belonging to the Soviet Union. Semenkov said most Catholics believed a “major Russian show of force” was likely after the failure of East-West talks.

He told CNS that Ukraine’s Catholics were uncertain how Russian forces would treat their church, but added it had been agreed that priests and nuns should decide for themselves whether to leave or stay in the event of a “military aggression.”

Father Roman Krat, judicial vicar of Ukraine’s Odessa-Simferopol Diocese, said he also believed an invasion was likely, given the completion of Russia’s 750-mile Nord Stream 2 gas pipeline to Europe, good fighting conditions offered by frozen winter surfaces and the improbability of a military response by NATO.

He told CNS that support for Russian President Vladimir Putin had fallen among Russian-speakers in the western Catholic Church because of events in the occupied Crimea and Donbas regions. He also said it was expected Catholic clergy would be required to accept Russian citizenship to continue ministering if Russian troops invaded.

“Putin knows some Western countries, already completely dependent on Russian gas, would choose warm homes over caring about Ukraine,” he told CNS. “He also faces internal economic and social problems and needs to divert public attention — to show Russia is strong and victorious under his leadership. Although there’s much bargaining and manipulation under way, these factors all point in one direction.”

Father Krat also said several Catholic parishes would lie in the direct path of a Russian attack.

“While we’re aware NATO has not agreed to Russia’s demands, we don’t know whether this will provide a pretext for direct action or for further bargaining,” he said. “But we do know there’s a real threat now, on a different military level than previously, so we’re seeking prayers for peace, as well as material help and support.”

“Our church has cautiously avoided pronouncing on Ukraine’s future alignments, believing this could negatively affect its future work.” Father Krat told CNS. “But if the Russian army occupies these territories, there’ll be a total change. The Church is unlikely to be outlawed or forced to close its dioceses, but its clergy will plummet, as Ukrainian priests are forced out and Polish priests made to go home.”

In April 2014, Russian-backed separatists declared independent republics in Ukraine’s Luhansk and Donetsk regions, triggering a war that has left more than 14,000 dead. The international community still recognizes the regions as part of Ukraine.

Russia began amassing 120,000 troops on Ukraine’s frontiers in late October, prompting fears of a three-pronged offensive involving tank attacks, airstrikes and artillery bombardments.

Speaking in Moscow Jan. 14, Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov said a NATO commitment never to expand or deploy forces to Ukraine was essential for defusing tensions, although Western governments have rejected the demand.

Ukrainian Catholic Archbishop Sviatoslav Shevchuk of Kyiv-Halych, head of the country’s Eastern Catholic Church, told Poland’s Catholic Information Agency, KAI, Jan. 14, that there was a “strangely peaceful atmosphere” in the country, despite the border buildup, but also warned Ukrainians would “defend themselves and shed blood” if Russia invaded.

The Indiana Catholic Conference (ICC) is among the strongest voices in a chorus of support for legislation that would cap the exorbitant interest rates charged by the payday lending industry.

If the effort is successful, the Hoosier state would join half the nation in placing limits on the payday lending institutions that currently charge consumers an annual percentage rate (APR) of up to nearly 400 percent on the short-term loans that they offer. Senate Bill 253 and House Bill 1159 would restrict the APR on payday loans, also known as cash advances, to no more than 36 percent.

At a recent press conference introducing the bipartisan, bicameral legislation, lawmakers and allies alike said it is past time for Indiana to take a stand against predatory lending.

“With a 36 percent APR versus current Indiana law, borrowers could have saved $60 million per year, putting more money into the local economy and communities that typically lack resources but allow payday lending to thrive,” said Sen. Ron Alting (R-Lafayette), the author of Senate Bill 253. “We know that when borrowers take out a payday loan, they reborrow frequently, creating a cycle that they struggle to leave.”

Payday lenders are allowed direct access to a borrower’s checking account as security for a loan, and they know the date that a borrower will be paid. A person living paycheck to paycheck or relying on Social Security or disability payments can quickly become entrapped in an endless cycle of debt, lawmakers and advocates say.

“I will be asking my colleagues to make sure (this legislation) gets a hearing and full consideration this session so we can stop this debt trap in Indiana once and for all,” Alting said.

Rep. Carey Hamilton (D-Indianapolis), author of House Bill 1159, also spoke out against what she characterized as the “shameless practices” of the payday lending industry.

“We have an obligation to protect vulnerable Hoosiers from this industry, which hurts every single person it comes across and only benefits its mostly out-of-state owners,” Hamilton said.

“This industry strategically targets veterans and seniors, minority communities, and low-income working families.”

The lawmakers highlighted their proposed legislation at a Jan. 11 press conference sponsored by Hoosiers for Responsible Lending, a coalition of veterans’ organizations, social service agencies, consumer advocacy groups, and faith-based communities, including the Catholic Church.

Speaking on behalf of the five Catholic bishops of Indiana, ICC leader Angela Espada called predatory lending tactics “evil and exploitative” and amounting to usury, which she noted is condemned by the Catholic Church and all major religions.

“You don’t have to be Catholic to know that predatory lending is wrong,” said Espada, executive director of the ICC, the public policy voice of the Catholic Church in Indiana. “We should respect the dignity of all people. Put another way, we should love our neighbors, and if we love our neighbors, we don’t take advantage of them or exploit them.”

Espada cited remarks made by Pope Francis in 2014, when he called usury — the lending of money with an exorbitant rate of interest — “a dramatic social ill” and a “scourge on our society.” She added that in 2015, the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) joined with other Christian denominations to form Faith for Just Lending, which calls for limits on predatory lending nationwide.

Legislative efforts to restrict the payday lending industry in Indiana have hit roadblocks in recent years. Advocates are hopeful that 2022 will be different, with companion bills in both the House and the Senate championed by lawmakers representing the two major parties.

“We have more momentum (this year) because of this bicameral and bipartisan effort,” said Andy Nielsen, senior policy analyst for the Indiana Community Action Poverty Institute, formerly the Indiana Institute for Working Families. “Both chambers have interest in this issue, and it isn’t divided over political ideology. Moreover, this is also a popular issue with Hoosier voters.”

Nielsen, whose organization is part of the Hoosiers for Responsible Lending coalition, cited data indicating that 88 percent of Indiana voters approve a rate cap on payday loans.

“Now is the time for the General Assembly to take action on these bills,” Nielsen said. Senate Bill 253 and House Bill 1159 have been assigned to committees, but hearings are not yet scheduled. Espada called on the Catholic faithful to learn more about the proposed legislation and to make their voices heard with their lawmakers.

“We need your help to stop this scourge in Indiana,” Espada said.

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Francis approved “Pilgrims of Hope” as the motto for the Holy Year 2025. The motto aims to give a concise sense of the full meaning of the jubilee journey, Archbishop Rino Fisichella told Vatican News Jan. 13. The words “pilgrims” and “hope” also represent key themes of Pope Francis’ pontificate, said the archbishop, president of the Pontifical Council for Promoting New Evangelization, which is in charge of the Holy Year planning efforts. The archbishop said the pope approved the motto Jan. 3 and that he is awaiting further instructions from the pope. In the meantime, the council already is working with Vatican and Italian authorities on the best way to welcome a large number of visitors during the year. Traditionally for holy years, the celebrations begin with the pope opening the Holy Door of St. Peter’s Basilica on Christmas Eve and ends with the sealing of the door one year later. The holy doors of St. John Lateran, St. Paul Outside the Walls and St. Mary Major are opened for the year, too.

Gomez: Imitate Rev. King’s example, prophetic witness in work for justice

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops urged all people of good will to commemorate the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.’s life and legacy Jan. 17 by remembering “not only the justice he pursued, but how he pursued it.”

The civil rights leader “was driven by the biblical vision of righteousness and truth, a vision that he understood to be reflected in our nation’s founding documents,” said Los Angeles Archbishop José H. Gomez in a Jan. 15 statement. “He believed in what he called the ‘American creed,’ the belief expressed by our founders that all men and women are created equal and endowed by God with a sacred dignity and undeniable rights to life, liberty and equality,” the prelate added. Rev. King, who was assassinated in 1968 at age 39, would have turned 93 on Jan. 15. Martin Luther King Jr. Day is observed on the third Monday of January each year. “America faces many challenges today,” Archbishop Gomez said, including “this ongoing pandemic, issues of economic inequality and racial discrimination, violence in our communities, the struggle to welcome immigrants and refugees.” The nation also has “become more polarized and our divisions angrier.” In looking to the future, he urged all to carry on his work “for equality and justice” and “imitate his example and prophetic witness.”

Myanmar refugees, who have fled a flare-up in fighting between the Myanmar army and insurgent groups and settled temporarily along the Moei River, bathe in the waters on the Thai-Myanmar border, in Mae Sot, Thailand, Jan. 7, 2022. New Jersey Catholic bishops decry passage of expansive new abortion law

TRENTON, N.J. (CNS) — In a joint statement Jan. 11, New Jersey’s Catholic bishops unequivocally condemned the Freedom of Reproductive Choice Act, an expansive abortion bill they said was passed with extraordinary haste by the state Senate and General Assembly a day earlier. Democratic Gov. Phil Murphy, who is Catholic, has publicly committed to signing the bill into law. A replacement for the rejected Reproductive Freedom Act of October 2020, the new measure was passed by the Senate 23-15 and by the Assembly 46-22 with eight abstentions. Although abortion has long been legal and by the Assembly 23-15 and by the Senate 46-22 with eight abstentions. Although abortion has long been legal and has the effect of limiting the constitutional right to freedom of reproductive choice and that does not conform with the provisions and the express or implied purposes of this act, shall be deemed invalid and shall have no force or effect,” the bill states. In their letter, the bishops expressed their “profound disapppointment and deep concern about the passage of the bill,” which codifies into state law an individual’s right to an abortion, including late-term abortions. This law departs from the fundamental Catholic teaching that all life is sacred from conception to natural death.

Annual 100-hour nonstop public Bible reading planned in Louisiana diocese

ST. MARTINVILLE, La. (CNS) — An annual 100-hour, nonstop public Bible reading takes place in St. Martinville in the Diocese of Lafayette Jan. 19-23. The holy Bible will be read publicly from cover to cover without pause in the square of the diocese’s oldest church parish, St. Martin de Tours. The parish was erected in 1765 and the present church dates to 1836. The reading will begin at 12:30 p.m. (local time) Jan. 19 and end at 4:30 p.m. Jan. 23, which is Word of God Sunday. During the four days of continuous reading, 300 lectors from the various 121 parish churches in the Diocese of Lafayette as well as faith leaders from other denominations from across the Acadiana region will be employed. In addition to English, selections of the Bible will be read in French, Italian, German, Spanish, Vietnamese, Hebrew, Latin and Greek. More than 1,000 people usually attend at various times throughout the 100 hours. The Bible Marathon will be livestreamed on the Fête-Dieu du Teche Facebook page. The special event is intended to help “prime the pump” and reignite a love for the word of God and its practice in our lives, said Father Michael Champagne, a priest of the Community of Jesus Crucified, who is the organizer of the event.

Archbishop calls for prayers for Myanmar, which faces multiple crises

MANDALAY, Myanmar (CNS) — Archbishop Marco Tin Win of Mandalay has urged Catholics in Myanmar to hold special prayers for the nation facing “the crisis of COVID-19, hunger, civil wars and terrorism.” Ucanews.com reported the prelate has designated every Saturday evening for one hour of eucharistic adoration and the first Sunday of every month for Mass with the intention of peace. Archbishop Tin Win is the only Catholic leader to openly lend moral support to pro-democracy protesters; he stood with them on a street in Mandalay after the February 2021 coup. The archbishop has called on Catholics to “not lose hope and to have a deep faith in God amid the fear, anxiety and hopelessness gripping their nation,” ucanews.com reported. After more than five decades of military rule, Myanmar was on the road to democracy, but the political, economic and social freedoms that began to sprout in 2011 were abruptly ended by the military coup. The country has witnessed intense fighting between the military junta and rebel forces in the past few months in ethnic areas, including the predominantly Christian Kayah, Chin and Karen states, where civilians have been forced to leave their homes and flee to forests or take shelter in church institutions.

Pope: Synodality about listening to the Spirit, not a ‘majority consensus’

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The synodal process is a path of engagement that makes room for the Holy Spirit, and not a “majority consensus like a parliament’s” to guide the universal church, Pope Francis said. Speaking with leaders of the French Catholic Action movement Jan. 13, the pope said that synodality is “not a plan or a program to be implemented” but “a style to be adopted” that listens to the spirit through the word of God and adult opening to the Spirit. The French bishops’ conference had said the purpose of the meeting was for the Catholic Action leaders to present to the pope and other Vatican leaders a document titled “Being Apostles today.” The goal of the document, which France’s synodal process was born of two years of work by Catholic groups in France, is “to discern what unites them in their approach and their understanding of the Church” and to present it to the pope, said a press release. The French bishops’ conference also noted that the document aligns with the goals of the upcoming Synod on Synodality.

The smell of incense wafted through the air at the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception in Fort Wayne on Sunday, Jan. 16 as 20 men took their final liturgical step toward ordination to the permanent diaconate, the installation of acolytes. Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades praised them for hearing and answering God's call to service. If it be God's will, these men will be ordained next spring.

Family and friends and especially the wives of the deacon candidates were in attendance alongside several other deacons from around the diocese. Father Stephen Colchin and Father Louis Fowoyo concelebrated.

An acolyte is one who assists at religious ceremonies, mainly at the Mass, and its roots lead back to the Greek word for “follower.” In his role as acolyte, each deacon candidate has been preparing to aid the priest in serving at the altar, distributing Communion and bringing the Sacrament to the homebound. Last year, these men were installed as lectors in the Church. After ordination, in addition to their other acts of service, the deacons will then be allowed to proclaim the Gospel and give homilies.

“It is a ministry of charity, especially to the weak and the sick, a ministry centered in the Holy Eucharist, the sacrament of Christ’s love.”

— Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades

Twenty men are currently in formation to become permanent deacons for the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend. On Sunday, Jan. 16, they were installed as acolytes by Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades at the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception in Fort Wayne and are on track for ordination next spring.

Twenty deacon candidates installed as acolytes

BY JENNIFER BARTON

He gives the new wine of salvation, His Blood, along with His Body, to the disciples and to the Church, His bride.

He concluded by saying that Jesus, “gives us the superabundant grace of His love and nourishes us to live in His love and to bring His love into the world. My sons about to be instituted as acolytes, may you always be devoted to Jesus in the Holy Eucharist. May you bring His love and grace to all whom you will serve as acolytes and as His future deacons!”

After the homily, each of the deacon candidates knelt before the bishop, who handed them a thurible and asked if they were prepared to give a life of service to the Church.

The newly instituted acolytes include Daniel Avila, Joseph Brown, Steven Burkins, John Buzzynski, Joseph Cochran, Roger Dinius, Curt Feeece, Edward Fox, Philip Hayes, Raymond Krouse, Thomas Labuzienski, Robert Lortie, Orlando Miranda, Andrew Oross, Maximo Ortega, Michael Pleinzer, Stephen Reed, Robin Slocum, James Summers, Jr. and Harry Verhiley.

Four of the deacon candidates represent St. Pius X in Granger and others come from parishes across the diocese. One of these candidates, Burkins, hails from St. Dominic Parish in Bremen. He said he began his journey by looking into the possibility of becoming a permanent deacon when his children were younger, but he was advised to wait until they were older. “I never honestly thought too much about it until Father Fernando Jiménez approached me several years ago and felt the call then, and had to say yes,” he remarked.

He feels “very blessed” to receive this calling and has grown in his faith over the last three years of the process. “The program’s amazing. I can’t say enough good things about it,” he said with a laugh. “Now I know that these four years are not going to be enough, we have to keep learning because the richness of the faith is incredible.”

He also said the time in formation has passed quickly and he is looking forward to next year’s ordination ceremony.
Great-grandmother’s cause lives on in posterity

BY JENNIFER BARTON

More than 45 years ago when abortion was made legal in the U.S., a local woman saw the need to support pregnant women and help protect the lives of unborn babies in her small corner of the world. The year after that fateful decision, Blanche Marie Hunckler helped found the Huntington County Gift of Life, which became the Huntington County Right to Life. Perhaps it was her love for God or her degree in nursing that fueled this desire, but she gave many years of service for the cause.

Hunckler served on the pro-life board for the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend under Bishop William E. McManus, organized fundraisers for the Right to Life and instructed students at Huntington Catholic High School on this critical issue so that they could be prepared to argue the case for life. With her husband Paul, she raised her own children in the faith at SS. Peter and Paul Parish.

Unfortunately for this world, God’s work for her came to an end in December of 2020 after 100 years of life. But her passion and her defense of life continues to echo down through the generations of those who followed, particularly within her own family. Her great-granddaughter, Erica, has taken up the torch in the pro-life movement.

Erica lives in Noblesville, though she remembers the first time her great-grandmother took her to the HCRTL office as a young girl. “I didn’t fully understand what abortion was, obviously, because I was so young,” she shared. What she did connect with were the models on display showing an unborn baby from conception to birth, “and that’s an image that stuck with me throughout this growing passion of mine, because, to me, it’s so obvious, the humanity of the unborn.”

She described her great-grandmother as being active, even to her last days, with projects piled up on a desk at the nursing home where Blanche Marie spent her last few years. During that time, Blanche Marie did her best to continue supporting the efforts of the Right to Life organization she helped establish. Sadly, due to lack of volunteers, the Huntington office was recently forced to close its doors, though there is still potential for its reopening if new volunteers can be found.

“I know that my great-grandmother was a huge driving force for that resource in Huntington, and even though Huntington is such a small community, it’s proof that they were necessary for this community because they stayed going through this year, from the 1970s to this past year,” Erica said.

In her junior year at Guerin Catholic High School within the Diocese of Lafayette-in-Indiana, Erica sought to deepen her involvement in the pro-life movement. A group called Teens for Life was already established at her school, though it had been mostly inactive in her early high school years. She stated, “I was itching to do something, especially with changes in presidents and laws and there’s so much going on around the cause that I really thought there was more we could do.”

A new leadership team was established and “we signed a contract with Students for Life, so that national organization has allowed us to be involved in things we’ve never been involved with before.” Their regional coordinator, Mary Carmen, has been invaluable in engaging Guerin students in the cause, as well as providing materials for Erica to use at the school.

Now a senior, one of Erica’s tasks in the Students for Life organization at Guerin Catholic HCRTL, which published it in their website and Instagram account. Erica even sent it to the pro-life movement both locally and nationally.

Additionally, another school group chat of friends who are pro-women, it’s profoundly anti-abortion, and they’re not blindly telling people the Catholic Church says so – as she said, “It’s not just because it’s the law.”

Erica often watches on Live Action’s YouTube channel, where volunteers begin conversations about abortion with people on the street. She believes that it is important to know the arguments for and against abortion and to have these types of conversations that allow others to come to the morally correct decision about abortion, and not to be coerced into it. In the poem, Erica hits the hard truths behind the industry’s lies, focusing on issues such as women’s rights and Planned Parenthood’s racially driven objectives.

“Our body of mine—Yes-it is my own. Uniquely made, By God, I was sewn into my mother’s womb So, let it be known: I was made In the Image of God, The only One Who sits on the throne, With Him reside the Angels, Saints, and souls, Who lost their lives, As they were torn, Part from whole.

Let us not forget, The parents filled with regret, And their need to be consoled. No rally, protest, or political poll Can prepare a mother or a father, For the toll, That abortion takes, On their immortal soul.

To those who know Of the lies that spread: Share the truth with them instead.

No woman needs abortion, To be a woman of ambition. It is through this detestable invention, That misogyny continues to be written. In our laws and in the hearts, And in the minds of young gentlemen.

There is a popular pro-choice claim: “Old white men are those to blame.” With tongue in cheek I say this is true, For the justices in favor, Of a woman’s “right to choose” Nine justices On the bench, Nine white justices Were appointed, So they went, To fulfill their duty, Regardless of by whom they were sent. Nine white male justices And just two of them would dissent.

From this decision came, Legalization Of an incorporation That inflicts pain. I prefer to use their name, Because Planned Parenthood, is seemingly unmentioned. Spreading lies for personal gain. Exploiting women to boost their fame. Stand up! Be not afraid! Our bodies are not Planned Parenthood’s domain.

They prey on the marginalized, Marketing specifically in their location, Establishing their disservice With countless health violations. Did someone forget to mention? Racism is their foundation—Abortion’s minority is Caucasian. 48 years pass. Generations are heartbroken Alas, hearts burst into shards Like a pile of shattered glass, Because the deafening silence, Of aborted children en masse, Thunders in the hearts Made of glass.

Marches planned in support of life
It has been 49 years since the fateful 1972 Supreme Court decision that legalized abortion in all 50 states. In the years following that decision, many organizations have held annual peaceful protests to pray and offer support for the unborn. There are several options for those who wish to support the pro-life movement both locally and nationally.

South Bend baby box ‘sends a message’

By Jennifer Barton

The mission of Safe Haven Baby Boxes is to aid mothers in crisis, and the baby boxes that they have helped install in locations across Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky and even as far away as Arizona and Florida are a last line of defense for life. For the past two years, Knights of Columbus groups in South Bend have been working to bring a baby box to their city.

That dream has finally come true as of Jan. 13, when a box was dedicated at Fire Station 11 on Bendix Drive.

Knights of Columbus Council 553, a combined council from several different parishes, helped spearhead these efforts. Knight Tim McBride spoke to Today’s Catholic about the council’s role in bringing the baby box to the area.

Through Indiana’s Safe Haven Law, anyone is able to surrender an infant less than 45 days old with any emergency service provider without revealing their name or other information, or, as Safe Haven’s billboards read, “No shame, no blame, no names.”

In spite of these laws, sometimes people feel too ashamed, embarrassed or afraid to surrender a child in a face-to-face situation. The case of a New Mexico woman who gave birth and abandoned her still-living infant son in a dumpster on Jan. 7 demonstrates the need for greater public awareness of the Safe Haven Laws, as well as an anonymous means of surrendering an infant. The hope is that the baby boxes could potentially prevent these devastating stories.

McBride told of a woman who worked closely with emergency personnel and so surrendered her infant in a nearby town’s baby box to remain anonymous.

Typically, these boxes are installed at hospitals or fire stations that have around-the-clock staffing. When a baby is placed inside, the exterior door locks once closed so that no one can reopen it and a silent alert is sent to personnel inside, who can retrieve the infant only through the interior door. The box has oxygen and is climate-controlled, so there is no danger to the child in the brief time he or she would be inside it.

Members of Council 553 learned all of this at their state convention years ago. They also learned that a baby box costs $10,000, half for the box itself and half for the billboards that Safe Haven puts up in the community to inform people of the Safe Haven Law, along with an additional $200 a year for maintenance. “We decided that this was a good thing, and decided to do it in South Bend,” McBride stated.

Within just a couple of weeks, Council 553 and the recently formed St. Thérèse Martin council at St. Thérèse Little Flower Parish had raised a large sum of money – enough for not just one baby box, but two. Much of the money came from the Knights themselves, which McBride noted was a testimony to the organization’s dedication to save lives and “help mothers have babies.”

Initially, community leaders in South Bend were not friendly to the idea of a baby box, but two. Much of the money came from the Knights themselves, which McBride noted was a testimony to the organization’s dedication to save lives and “help mothers have babies.”

Initially, community leaders in South Bend were not friendly to the idea of a baby box, but McBride put it, “she got their attention” by speaking er and as McBride put it, “she made her point.” Kelsey is a retired firefighter and as McBride put it, “she turned. Kelsey is a retired firefight

Newborn abandonment case prompts renewed emphasis on ‘safe haven’ efforts

BY TOM TRACY

In 20 years of community organizing, resulting in more than 300 cases of newborns saved from infant abandonment, Floridian Nick Silverio has never actually witnessed a criminal child abandonment in progress.

Until, that is, a group of people looking through a dumpster in Hobbs, New Mexico, discovered a newborn infant boy still alive and reportedly wrapped in a dirty blanket with its umbilical cord still attached.

Surveillance video taken outside near the dumpster and recently aired on national news led police to the arrest of a teen mother, showing the moments Alexi Avila, 18, allegedly tossed a black garbage bag into the dumpster.

Police have charged the woman, who has confessed to the crime, with attempted murder and child abuse.

Avila reportedly told police she gave birth to the boy in her parents’ bathroom earlier in the day and panicked. She allegedly stuffed the baby inside two plastic bags, one with other trash, and put it in the dumpster.

“She got out of the car very slowly and threw the baby in like you would throw out the trash — we have never seen that happen (on video),” said Silverio, a former information technology business owner who is the founder of A Safe Haven For Newborns near Miami.

A network of volunteers, hospitals and fire departments in Florida works to save infants from the dangers of abandonment and an almost certain death. A Safe Haven for Newborns operates a 24/7 hotline that connects mothers in crisis around the U.S. with safe and legal options for placing their children in an adoptive home.

Many state laws allow mothers — or fathers — to take an unharmed newborn up to 7 days old to a designated safe haven drop-off location such as a local hospital instead of leaving them somewhere else or doing something they will later regret.

“It was horrific, it breaks your heart to see the callousness of someone abandon a life and destroying her own — her life is over now, basically,” Silverio said of the New Mexico incident.

If the teen had known about a safe haven, “would she have exercised that option?” he wondered.

If she did know of it, hopefully she would have sought help, he added. “I don’t know what goes into the mind of someone like that; it seems they are not connected to society and do they know that there are options for such a situation.”

“I’ve talked to different people in the last few days who’ve said, ‘That’s terrible’ and ‘What a horrible person,’” he told Catholic News Service, “but the idea is to...

do not fit neatly into the boxes that the media or popular perception might place us.

For that reason, I wonder if the Church can play a mediating role in the midst of our division. It can provide a meeting ground where Catholics and others who identify with either party can meet the other.

In 2020, the bishops’ conference promoted a program called “Civilize It.” hoping to ratchet down the anger in the political discourse. It provided prayers, resources and even a pledge.

To build on that initial effort, parishes and dioceses could bring people together for acts of service. In a soup kitchen, a pantry, eucharistic adoration, a pro-life prayer vigil or a homeless shelter is where diverse Catholics can stand shoulder to shoulder.

Our differences are real, but not as huge as we fear. What we need to pay more attention to is what binds us together.

The Ten Commandments’ and our pathetic attention span

I like to watch old movies. Over the past several months, I’ve watched (or re-visited) a number of Alfred Hitchcock thrillers, some screwball comedies from the thirties and forties, and a couple of film-noir classics. Last week, over the course of three evenings, I managed to get through the three hours and forty minutes (yes, you read that correctly) of the British Heston version of the “Ten Commandments” from 1956. With delight, I took in the still marvelously technicolor, the over-the-top costumes, the wonderfully corny faux-Shakespearean dialogue, and the hammy acting that is, one might say, so bad that it’s good. But what especially struck me was the sheer length of the film.

Knowing that it required a rather extraordinary act of attention on the part of its audience, it is astonishing to remember that it was widely popular, easily the most successful of all films in terms of length and popularity then and today. I think the question to muster the patience required to make a film like the “Ten Commandments” so popular today? I wondered, ever be able to end on a down note, permit me to draw your attention to what I consider a real sign of hope. In just the last couple of years, there has been a trend in the direction of long-form podcasts that are attracting huge audiences of young people. Joe Rogan, who analyzes one of the most popular shows in the country, speaks to his guests for upwards of three hours, and he gets millions of viewers. In the past year, I have appeared on two podcasts with Jordan Peterson, each one in excess of two hours and featuring pretty high-level discourse. The first one has reached just shy of one million views, and the second, published three weeks ago, has already surpassed five hundred thousand views.

Perhaps we’re turning a corner. Perhaps young people have tired of vituperative sound bites and superficially pseudo-intellectualism. To encourage this trend, I would like to invite all of you to use much less social media — and maybe pick up “The Brothers Karamazov.”

Abdominal pain and the next day unexpectedly gave birth.

“It is not just teenagers. We have had (hotline) calls from women as old as 41,” said Silverio, who is a member of Christ the King Parish in Perrine, Florida, as well as the Knights of Columbus and the Order of St. Lazarus of Jerusalem, known as the Lazarists.

Following his wife’s death in 2000, Silverio saw a magazine article about child abandonment worldwide and discerned it was God suggesting a new purpose for the remainder of his life.

In keeping with his IT roots, Silverio said A Safe Haven for Newborns has a strong presence on social media where teen mothers are likely to find them.

The organization also has developed a mobile phone app and encourages participating high school students in Florida and elsewhere to earn community service hours doing projects related to safe haven principles and the crisis of infant abandonment.

A successful intervention means not only that a child’s life is saved, allowing the child to grow to adulthood, but a parent also is saved from criminal prosecution and a lifetime of guilt, while the hopes and dreams of parents waiting to adopt also are fulfilled.

“It is a huge problem for the (New Mexico) woman, who will be charged with a serious crime and (be) incarcerated and stigmatized for the rest of her life, and the child the same. He will have to live for a lifetime with the knowledge of being thrown into a dumpster.”

“We are reaching out in every way we can, but would we have reached (the New Mexico mother)? I don’t know,” Silverio said, “but we need to keep on trying.”

“When a baby is left with a safe haven,” he added, “they grow up and discover there are mothers who loved them enough to provide a family for them.”

Despite reducing poverty, expanded child tax credit’s future is uncertain

BY DENNIS SADOWSKI

CNS — A few weeks before Christmas, Jessica Moreno and her three kids were able to move from her parents’ home in Wood Dale, Illinois, outside of Chicago, to their own apartment a few blocks away.

“The apartment was heaven sent,” she said. “I was looking at homelessness. I can’t imagine being in that situation with three kids in the winter.”

Moreno, 34, who works part time as a paralegal, credits the $750 a month she received under the enhanced child tax credit program for allowing her family to make the move. Since the pandemic began nearly two years ago, Moreno had worked irregular hours courts closed and the need for legal work slowed. She and her children moved into her parents “tiny, teency house.” It was crowded, but everyone sacrificed so no one would be out on the streets.

Moreno learned about the program and worked with case managers at Catholic Charities of the Diocese of Joliet, Illinois, to file the paperwork to receive the enhanced child tax credit each month from July until December, when the program ended. She credited the agency for its never-ending work on her case.

The expanded child tax credit program was enacted in March under the American Rescue Plan. It was the most recent measure in a series of legislative efforts to pump money into the economy in response to the financial downturn caused by the onset of COVID-19.

The expanded tax credit covered 2021 and called for families with children to receive six monthly advance payments rather than wait to claim the credit on their annual tax return. The provision raised the credit to a maximum of $3,600 for children younger than 6 and $3,000 for children 6 to 17. The previous credit was capped at $2,000 per child. Significantly, the credit was fully refundable, meaning that children in families with the lowest incomes received the same amount as children in higher families.

More than 61 million children in more than 36 million households benefited from the credit, according to a study released Dec. 22 by the Center on Poverty and Social Policy at Columbia University. The monthly payment in November alone kept 3.7 million children out of poverty, the center found.

Before the expansion, 27 million children — including about half of Black and Latino children and half of children living in rural communities — received less than the full credit or no credit because their families’ incomes were too low.

Moreno said the monthly advances under the expanded child tax credit improved her family’s life. “I was able to do more things for the kids, get them school supplies, pay for a few things, saved some for an apartment and pay some bills. I don’t think I would have been able to do any of that without those checks,” she said.

However, the advance payments ended in December. While she will be able to claim an additional amount of the credit on her federal tax return due April 18, she’s expecting that making ends meet now will be more difficult.

(Tax Day is usually April 15, unless it falls on a weekend or holiday, as it does this year, so it’s been pushed to the next available business day.)

Moreno decided to share her story with Catholic News Service in an effort to convince the U.S. Senate to enact President Joe Biden’s Build Back Better Act, which includes a provision to extend the expanded credit through at least 2022. The House of Representatives narrowly approved the bill in November.

Catholic agencies and anti-poverty advocates are calling on the Senate to enact the bill, saying the enhanced child tax credit strengthens families and reduces poverty.

Presentation Sister Richelle Friedman, director of public policy at the Coalition on Human Needs, said she feared that failing to extend the expanded tax credit would cause millions of children to fall back into poverty. “We’re working really hard to ensure that the kids eligible for the expanded child tax credit are getting it,” she said.

A letter last Sept. 7 from the chairmen of five U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops’ committees to members of Congress specifically cited that the long-range future of the country is “intimately linked to the well-being of families” in urging that the enhanced credit be made permanent.

“The credit is meant to address child poverty. That is something that Catholic social teaching is behind. The child tax credit is one of the most effective tools that we have to address child poverty,” Julie Bodnar, domestic policy adviser in the USCCB Office of Domestic Social Development, explained.

Officials at Catholic Charities USA, including Anthony Granado, vice president of government relations, are working with senators to move the tax credit forward as part of the Build Back Better Act.

Granado said the expanded child tax credit has been “essential” for families who lose jobs, for low-income families, for people who don’t get to work from their laptops (at home), working-class people who cannot afford child care.

Diocesan Catholic Charities agencies are part of the drive to ensure that the tax credit continues at least through 2023, Granado said. The legislation is stalled in the Senate.

Sen. Joe Manchin, D-W.Va., who has wavered on his support for the bill and has raised questions about a tax credit that does not include a work provision, is in the chamber with 50 Republicans and 50 Democrats. Manchin’s vote is needed to approve the measure, allowing Vice President Kamala Harris to break a tie.

Manchin’s office responded with a brief email to a CNS inquiry to discuss the bill: “Senator Manchin has always supported the child tax credit and would like to see it targeted to those families who need it most.”

Laura Peralta-Schulte, senior director of public policy and government affairs at Network, a Catholic social justice lobby, said efforts are underway to reach out to Manchin to better explain how the credit “is a transformative policy” that has eased the stifling effects of poverty.

She pointed to findings from the Columbia University study that shows people have used the payment for everyday needs including food, bills, clothing, school expenses and rent or a mortgage.

“There’s so much discussion about the dignity of families. The data shows that government can play a role alleviating poverty and when people get resources they actually use them for the essential needs,” Peralta-Schulte told CNS.

As the lobbying continued, Moreno worked Jan. 13 after she and her daughter dealt with illness from COVID-19 for nearly two weeks. Her sons dealt with illness from COVID-19 and half of children living in families with lowest incomes received the same amount as children in higher families.

Moreno used a series of $750-a-month checks under the expanded child tax credit program to rent an apartment for herself and her children and avoid becoming homeless.
