Bishops cite abortion deregulation fears in statement

Bishops cite abortion deregulation fears in statement

BY PATRICIA ZAPOR

BALTIMORE (CNS) — Fears about laws and changes in regulations on abortion that might advance under a new Democratic-run Congress and White House are the central focus of a statement approved by the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops Nov. 12 during their annual fall meeting in Baltimore.

The majority of the 830-word, untitled statement focuses on concerns about the possible passage of the Freedom of Choice Act, calling it “an evil law that would further divide our country” and adding that the church “should be intent on opposing evil.”

It warns against interpreting the outcome of the Nov. 4 elections as “a referendum on abortion” and says “aggressively pro-abortion policies, legislation and executive orders will permanently alienate tens of millions of Americans.”

The statement was drafted during the bishop’s meeting and involved a total of nearly three hours of discussion on the topic during executive and public sessions Nov. 11. Under USCCB policies, statements drafted outside the usual committee approval process may be issued by the conference president on behalf of the bishops.

The final product was written under the supervision of Cardinal Francis E. George of Chicago, USCCB president, after the bishops weighed in with a wide range of recommendations about its content, tone and language.

With economic downturn, needs of the poor increase

Vincent Village a beneficiary of CCHD collection

BY TIM JOHNSON

FORT WAYNE — Imagine being homeless and having your name placed on a waiting list with 50 names ahead of you to enter a shelter that helps the homeless get back on their feet. That is the situation many families face when seeking shelter at Vincent Village in Fort Wayne. Vincent Village Director Ann Helmke is also the diocesan director for the Catholic Campaign for Human Development (CCHD), sponsored by the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) to fight poverty across the United States and in the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend.

Along with the generosity of the diocese through the Annual Bishop’s Appeal, Vincent Village was also the recipient of a national CCHD grant and received a grant from the diocese’s portion of the CCHD collection. The collection is slated this Sunday, Nov. 23, and envelopes can be found in church envelope packets. Twenty-five percent of the CCHD collection stays in the diocese to fight poverty right here. Poverty is on the rise and fast becoming a serious problem in the current economy. The need is great.

Area groups and parishes apply for CCHD funding and selected applicants are approved by Bishop John M. D’Arcy. Grants are awarded based on whether or not the activity is going to help the poor move out of poverty. For example, giving food out would not be a funded activity but helping to set up community vegetable gardens, financial literacy, English as second language, etc., are all activities that would address the root causes of poverty. Helmke told Today’s Catholic that Vincent Village and TAP (Transforming Action into Power) in the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend have received grants from the national office of CCHD. Brian Stevens from the national office visited the diocese a few weeks ago to monitor the grants.

Local grants, Helmke said, are used to educate Vincent Village families with budgeting and financial management. The national grant provided economic development funding and “we used it to start up the Vincent Village Outlet Store, providing free furnishings for homeless families moving...”
U.S. bishops to ask President-elect Obama not to support or sign Freedom Of Choice Act

BISHOP JOHN M. DABRY

Some days in Baltimore

It is the first diocese in our country. Sometimes called the Primary See. The distinction held Carroll was its first Ordaining Bishop. His cousin, Charles Carroll of Carrolton, was a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and I believe the only Catholic signer. The present archbishop is Edward J. Brunan, a native of New York. In the last few years, the bishops of our country have returned to Baltimore for our fall meeting.

A historical moment

There was much discussion among the bishops at general sessions, and informally, about the recent election. The election of an African-American as president of the United States was greeted with great respect, and joy, that our country has come so far. We have a number of African-American bishops, and our president for a recent term, was Archbishop Wilton Gregory, of Atlanta, an African-American born in Chicago. Gladness — but important, which have come about — what concerns me is the present legislation. Our Pro-Life Office supplied me with a copy of the Freedom Of Choice Act. This was a request that the president-elect not divide the people, but rather draw people together to face the serious problems confronting us; namely, the economy, the issue of immigration and wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. If the government of our beloved country pushes ahead in making abortion a right protected by the Constitution, and are not required to allow abortions; many believe that this legislation would take away such respect for conscience.

What concerns many is that the president-elect is quite clearly that he would support the Freedom of Choice Act and sign it into law.

In the statement of our president, Cardinal George, the archbishop of Chicago, approved unanimously by the body of bishops, we expressed the belief that the president-elect was sincere in his call for national unity. We bishops indicated our support for that call, and asked him in order to ensure such unity, not to support the Freedom of Choice Act. This was a request that the president-elect not divide the people, but rather draw people together to face the serious problems confronting us; namely, the economy, the issue of immigration and wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. If the government of our beloved country pushes ahead in making abortion a right protected by this statute, it will be necessary to organize a strong opposition, and we would see this as a solemn responsibility. It is my understanding that some of the bishops of our conference hope to meet with the president-elect on this and other issues.

A new translation

We also approved, after intense discussion, and a number of amendments, prayers to be included in the new missal. Our readers may wonder why the church is, again, looking to change the prayers at Mass, which we have been praying now for many years. Let me say, that I am entirely supportive of this change. The new translations restore a certain sacredness to the words in these prayers. My old friend, and former colleague, Archbishop Al Hughes, served on a commission in Rome, and former colleague, Archbishop Al Hughes, served on a commission in Rome, and former colleague, Archbishop Al Hughes, served on a commission in Rome...

The new translation would be better and more beautiful, our people will rally behind it. It is a pastoral task, which we can face together. Also, the Mass is not something that we make up. We receive it as a gift, an enormous and ineffable gift from Christ through the church. This translation would be better English, more sacred, and will help us to pray. It is a change, which is foundational and helpful and will require the collaboration of all of us.

Also, this is favored by the Holy See, and a keen obligation of the bishop is always to be in communion with the successor of Peter.

A further update

On Sunday, I drove east to Our Lady of Guadalupe Church. What a joy to approach this church, built by the people of the diocese as part of our celebration of the great Jubilee of 2000. A special thank to Linda Forge, without whom, I believe this church might not be a reality. Her hard work over many years with architects and with the parish made it possible. It is a result of a nationwide architectural contest, and was beautifully on a hill looking like a church one might see in Mexico. I was there for confirmations in Spanish, and it was a joy.

A touch of sadness that Father Paul Bueter, who has been pastor there for these many years, including the time when the parish church was a garage in Milford, will be retiring Jan. 2, 2009. Father Paul is beloved by the parishioners there, and will be missed. And I am grateful that Sister Joan Hastreiter, CSJ, a native of this diocese, will continue her work at this important parish.

A great joy on Monday to give a presentation to all our Catholic Charities workers on Catholic identity, based on the encyclical “Deus Caritas Est.” I tried to lay out those distinctive characteristics and marks, which Pope Benedict XVI has laid down as central to a Catholic agency which works for the poor.

Winter is coming and seems already here. But so is Thanksgiving, and then Advent, and Christmas, and other beautiful moments of faith.

See you all next week.
In a January 2008 statement, Obama said he would support passage of the Freedom of Choice Act. The latest version introduced in April 2007 would establish federal protection of abortion, regardless of what state laws might exist. The statement from the bishops noted the recent election “was principally decided out of concern for the common good, for the loss of jobs and homes and financial security for families.” If the election “is misinterpreted ideologically as a referendum on abortion, the unity desired by President-elect Barack Obama and all Americans at this moment of crisis will be impossible to achieve,” it said. Besides alternating tens of millions of dollars on restricting restrictions on abortion “would be seen by many as an attack on the free exercise of their religion,” it said. The statement concluded by thanking “all those in politics who work with good will to protect the lives of the most vulnerable among us,” and reiterating the bishops’ desire “to work with all those who cherish our common good of our nation. The common good is not the sum total of individual desires and interests; it is achieved in the working out of a common life based upon good reason and good will for all.” It said that the bishops accompany Obama and his family and those “who are cooperating with his peaceful transition in government.” During discussion of the statement at the bishops’ meeting, some bishops raised the point about not taking the election results as a green light for changing abortion policies. Others seemed to prefer that the statement take on other issues, such as how the church responds to Catholic politicians whose political actions seem to conflict with church teaching. Bishop Joseph P. Martin of Scranton, Pa., said though he realized the statement would not address that topic “we are going to have to speak as firmly as possible to Catholic politicians who are not merely reluctant to vote pro-life, but are staunchly anti-life.” He noted that in ages past the U.S. bishops took canonical measures against Catholic politicians who supported institutional racism. “We have to have something like that,” he said. “I cannot have the vice president-elect (Joseph Biden) coming to Scranton (his childhood home) saying he learned his values there, when his values are utterly against the teachings of the Catholic Church.” Bishop Blase J. Cupich of Rapid City, S.D., emphasized emphasizing Obama’s campaign call to personal responsibility. “That was a message that resonated with the prominent Catholics who decided to support him and it may be the basis for seeking common ground,” he said. Some bishops recommended the statement specifically not take an attacking posture, and instead seek a “prophetic voice.” Bishop Cupich said it was important the statement be prophetic. “What we need is a prophecy of solidarity, speaking for those without a voice, for the community we serve and the nation we live in,” he said. The statement, he said, should be perceived as coming from bishops who are acting “as caring teachers.” Bishop D’Arcy said the bishops want to pray for the president-elect and cooperate with him, which is why before he made a statement: “We don’t want to take away that unity everybody wants by coming out with things that are going to be offensive to the Catholic population and others such as the Freedom of Choice Act (FOCA),” Bishop D’Arcy said. “There was much concern with the bishops about the Freedom of Choice Act,” he said, “and that was put in a letter that our (USCCB) president (Cardinal George) wrote. It’s going to be presented to our president-elect,” and presented publicly. “The Freedom of Choice Act would take away all the restrictions that have been placed on abortions like waiting periods and parental permission that have gone through state legislatures,” Bishop D’Arcy said. “For them to take that away would be a terrible offense to the Catholic population and others. But most importantly, it would endanger the lives of the most vulnerable.” “Also (the bishops) are worried about Catholic hospitals,” Bishop D’Arcy added. “Are they going to lose the protection that they have? So we think it is a violation of church and state. We think it is terrible legislation.” Bishop D’Arcy explained some of the concerns of the FOCA legislation: “It was already introduced in the Congress last summer. Now there’s a stronger Democratic majority, so that’s a worry. But we hope that the president would not so divide the country as to bring that in.” He added, “But there are some legislators, including Catholics, who have supported it. So there was much discussion on that.” Another item of discussion was the blessing of the child in the womb. Bishop D’Arcy said the blessing was requested by many mothers and many of the pro-life people. “That’s a very beautiful blessing,” Bishop D’Arcy said. “It’s published and put together, we hope it will emphasize, ‘this is a child, this is a person, and we’ll consecrate the person to God.’” On the personal level, Bishop D’Arcy said he spent the Holy hour and the opportunity for the sacrament of reconciliation were most appreciated. “I also saw the film ‘Testimony,’ which is the life of John Paul II. It was narrated by Bishop (Stanislaw) Dziwisz, the (Pope John Paul II’s) secretary,” Bishop D’Arcy reflected. “That was terrific.”

BISHOPS CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1

writing style. After an overnight writing session, the statement was read by Cardinal George to the body of bishops who greeted it with applause. It starts by saying the bishops “welcomed the moment of historic transition and look forward to working with President-elect (Barack) Obama and the members of the new Congress for the common good of all.” “We want to continue our work for economic justice and opportunity for all; our efforts to reform laws around immigration and the situation of the undocumented; our provision for women’s health and adequate health care for all, especially for women and children; our desire to improve education and adequate housing for all; our concern for the freedom of conscience of doctors, nurses and health care workers whose personal convictions do not permit them to cooperate in the taking of human life.” “We believe the Obama presidency will continue to cooperate gladly with the government and all others working for these goods.” The statement went on to explain church teaching that life is a gift from God and that “a good state policy can be made.” It raised concern that abortion “would have a ‘destructive effect on the freedom of conscience of doctors, nurses and health care workers whose personal convictions do not permit them to cooperate in the taking of human life.’” “We think it is terrible legislation,” Bishop D’Arcy said. “We have to have something like that,” he said. “I cannot have the vice president-elect (Joseph Biden) coming to Scranton (his childhood home) saying he learned his values there, when his values are utterly against the teachings of the Catholic Church.” Bishop Cupich said it was important the statement be prophetic. “What we need is a prophecy of solidarity, speaking for those without a voice, for the community we serve and the nation we live in,” he said. The statement, he said, should be perceived as coming from bishops who are acting “as caring teachers.”

US economic downturn fuels flow of migrants returning to Guatemala

By SUMMER HARLOW

GUATEMALA CITY (CNS) — The border town of Frontera, hawking nail clippers and gloves, Oscar Gonzalez was just one more merchant in a sea of vendors, shoppers, beggars and the occasional thief. Gonzalez was just one more of the 400 Central Americans before him, Gonzalez gave a $300 grant in Arizona, Gonzalez gave a $300 grant in Arizona, Gonzalez gave a $300 grant in Arizona, Gonzalez gave a $300 grant in Arizona.

The Freedom of Choice Act (FOCA) would have been introduced in at least the last four sessions of Congress without any action. Other versions go back to 1996. In 1993, when Democrats controlled both houses of Congress, the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee approved that year’s version. But it never reached a floor vote and saw no action in the House.

In a January 2008 statement, Obama said he would support passage of the Freedom of Choice Act. The latest version introduced in April 2007 would establish federal protection of abortion, regardless of what state laws might exist. The statement from the bishops noted the recent election “was principally decided out of concern for the common good, for the loss of jobs and homes and financial security for families.” If the election “is misinterpreted ideologically as a referendum on abortion, the unity desired by President-elect Barack Obama and all Americans at this moment of crisis will be impossible to achieve,” it said. Besides alternating tens of millions of dollars on restricting restrictions on abortion “would be seen by many as an attack on the free exercise of their religion,” it said. The statement concluded by thanking “all those in politics who work with good will to protect the lives of the most vulnerable among us,” and reiterating the bishops’ desire “to work with all those who cherish our common good of our nation. The common good is not the sum total of individual desires and interests; it is achieved in the working out of a common life based upon good reason and good will for all.” It said that the bishops accompany Obama and his family and those “who are cooperating with his peaceful transition in government.” During discussion of the statement at the bishops’ meeting, some bishops raised the point about not taking the election results as a green light for changing abortion policies. Others seemed to prefer that the statement take on other issues, such as how the church responds to Catholic politicians whose political actions seem to conflict with church teaching. Bishop Joseph P. Martin of Scranton, Pa., said though he realized the statement would not address that topic “we are going to have to speak as firmly as possible to Catholic politicians who are not merely reluctant to vote pro-life, but are staunchly anti-life.” He noted that in ages past the U.S. bishops took canonical measures against Catholic politicians who supported institutional racism. “We have to have something like that,” he said. “I cannot have the vice president-elect (Joseph Biden) coming to Scranton (his childhood home) saying he learned his values there, when his values are utterly against the teachings of the Catholic Church.” Bishop Blase J. Cupich of Rapid City, S.D., emphasized emphasizing Obama’s campaign call to personal responsibility. “That was a message that resonated with the prominent Catholics who decided to support him and it may be the basis for seeking common ground,” he said. Some bishops recommended the statement specifically not take an attacking posture, and instead seek a “prophetic voice.” Bishop Cupich said it was important the statement be prophetic. “What we need is a prophecy of solidarity, speaking for those without a voice, for the community we serve and the nation we live in,” he said. The statement, he said, should be perceived as coming from bishops who are acting “as caring teachers.” Bishop D’Arcy said the bishops want to pray for the president-elect and cooperate with him, which is why before he made a statement: “We don’t want to take away that unity everybody wants by coming out with things that are going to be offensive to the Catholic population and others such as the Freedom of Choice Act (FOCA),” Bishop D’Arcy said. “There was much concern with the bishops about the Freedom of Choice Act,” he said, “and that was put in a letter that our (USCCB) president (Cardinal George) wrote. It’s going to be presented to our president-elect,” and presented publicly. “The Freedom of Choice Act would take away all the restrictions that have been placed on abortions like waiting periods and parental permission that have gone through state legislatures,” Bishop D’Arcy said. “For them to take that away would be a terrible offense to the Catholic population and others. But most importantly, it would endanger the lives of the most vulnerable.” “Also (the bishops) are worried about Catholic hospitals,” Bishop D’Arcy added. “Are they going to lose the protection that they have? So we think it is a violation of church and state. We think it is terrible legislation.” Bishop D’Arcy explained some of the concerns of the FOCA legislation: “It was already introduced in the Congress last summer. Now there’s a stronger Democratic majority, so that’s a worry. But we hope that the president would not so divide the country as to bring that in.” He added, “But there are some legislators, including Catholics, who have supported it. So there was much discussion on that.” Another item of discussion was the blessing of the child in the womb. Bishop D’Arcy said the blessing was requested by many mothers and many of the pro-life people. “That’s a very beautiful blessing,” Bishop D’Arcy said. “It’s published and put together, we hope it will emphasize, ‘this is a child, this is a person, and we’ll consecrate the person to God.’” On the personal level, Bishop D’Arcy said he spent the Holy hour and the opportunity for the sacrament of reconciliation were most appreciated. “I also saw the film ‘Testimony,’ which is the life of John Paul II. It was narrated by Bishop (Stanislaw) Dziwisz, the (Pope John Paul II’s) secretary,” Bishop D’Arcy reflected. “That was terrific.”
Rising Unemployment

The U.S. unemployment rate has risen to more than 6 percent, the highest level since 2003.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Region</th>
<th>2008 National Unemployment Rate</th>
<th>Unemployment Rate by Region, Increase from September 2007</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Midwest 5.5</td>
<td>4.8%</td>
<td>4.5%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>West 6.6</td>
<td>5.1%</td>
<td>5.5%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>South 5.9</td>
<td>4.8%</td>
<td>5.5%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Northeast 5.7</td>
<td>6.7%</td>
<td>6.4%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>West 6.6</td>
<td>6.1%</td>
<td>5.7%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Midwest 5.5</td>
<td>6.5%</td>
<td>6.3%</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Source: Bureau of Labor Statistics

Assisted living has its advantages. Affordability is one of them.

Save up to $7,200 when you move in by November 30th.*

There comes a time when caring for an aging parent at home is no longer an option. Assisted living is the perfect solution – providing individualized care in a place where your loved one can thrive.

Sunrise Senior Living makes it easier than ever to secure quality senior care for the one that means so much to you. From personal assistance, medication management and specialized memory care, to social activities, meals and transportation – we tailor services to meet each resident’s needs. All in a setting that feels like home.

*Offer based on availability and on select units. See center for details. This offer is subject to change.

It’s the best of everything. For less. Act now to make the most of this limited time offer.

Parishes offer practical, spiritual support for the unemployed

BY CAROL ZIMMERMANN

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The impact of the wave of layoffs in firms, factories, financial companies and the automotive industry can be felt in parish halls or church basements across the country on any given weekend.

That’s where many of the newly unemployed go for practical and sometimes spiritual advice.

Just outside Detroit, at St. Andrew Parish in Rochester, a job support group began last year with about 20 participants. Now, at least 80 people attend the twice-monthly meetings, according to Betty Dobies, chair of St. Andrew’s Career Mentoring Ministry, which has a partnership with 13 church groups in the Detroit area.

“We started out thinking we’d review resumes and interview techniques, but we found that the main thing people really need is support,” Dobies said.

During the sessions, parish volunteers, including career advisers, licensed counselors and human resource specialists, are paired with job seekers. Guest speakers also give tips on updating resumes and on networking.

Dobies, a 66-year-old parishioner and retired sales manager who worked at Xerox and AT&T, said that in many of these sessions this is their first experience with unemployment. It might also be the first time for them to be looking for a job since they were initially hired.

“What they don’t know is that the job market has changed so much,” she told Catholic News Service in a Nov. 12 telephone interview. She noted that landing a job is often based more on networking than anything else. “Resumes are not enough,” she stressed.

“A lot of people have no idea what to do,” she said of those who have lost their jobs after decades with the same company.

In Michigan, these jobs have predominantly been in the automotive industry. The car giants Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Corp., slammed by huge losses, have closed factories and laid off thousands of employees already and may announce more cuts by the end of the year. The companies are waiting to hear if they will be given a federal bailout.

“We find people not in Michigan don’t really understand how dramatically this is affecting people,” Dobies said, adding that often those who have lost their jobs can’t easily pick up and move to work elsewhere because they often can’t sell their homes.

Like many other Michigan natives, Dobies comes from a family whose members have worked in the automotive industry for generations. She said she “never would have guessed” the car industry would be in trouble.

“It’s so encompassing,” she said. “The auto industry is tied to suppliers all over the world.”

But Detroit is not the only place feeling the affects of the nation’s troubled economy. Construction companies, retailers, mortgage bankers, securities firms, the motel industry, appliance factories, shipping companies and steel plants all have cut jobs this year.

During the month of October alone manufacturing jobs decreased by 90,000, construction by 49,000, retail by 38,000 and the financial industry by 24,000. Only the health care and mining industries gained employees in this time period.

Like many other unemployed Americans past 10.08 million, Dobies comes from a family whose members have worked in the automotive industry for generations. She said she “never would have guessed” the car industry would be in trouble.

“We want to make sure they can find another opportunity and sometimes their self-confidence,” Dobies said.

“We started out thinking we’d review resumes and interview techniques, but we found that the main thing people really need is support,” Dobies said.

“We find people not in Michigan don’t really understand how dramatically this is affecting people,” Dobies said, adding that often those who have lost their jobs can’t easily pick up and move to work elsewhere because they often can’t sell their homes.

According to the U.S. Labor Department statistics released Nov. 7, the jobless rate rose to 6.5 percent in October when employers fired 240,000 workers. That figure put the total number of unemployed Americans past 10.08 million, the highest level in 23 years. One year ago, the jobless rate was 4.8 percent.

Gene Gilbert, one of the coordinators of the St. Basil Job Search Support Group in Brecksville, Ohio, said he sees the affects of frequent layoffs in the Tuesday night meetings at his parish where participants range from “high-level CFOs to part-time employees,” and sometimes both husbands and wives are unemployed.

In Ohio, 7,000 job cuts were recently announced by the international shipping company DHL—Other layoffs in the state have come from Whirlpool Corp.; The Plain Dealer; Cleveland’s daily newspaper; and steel companies and auto parts factories.

Gilbert, who retired in 2002, knows what it’s like to lose a job; he was laid off in 1993 from a longtime job. But he also knows a job loss today is far different than it was a decade ago.

“When he was laid off he received one year’s severance pay and was guaranteed help with finding a new job.” That was back when companies were still taking better care of their employees,” he said, noting employees who lose their jobs today frequently do not get a severance package and are highly unlikely to get help finding another job.

He said parish job support programs are “filling a void.” The St. Basil group, formed about five years ago, is part of a group of four parishes in the Employment Ministry Network of the Cleveland Diocese.

“A major thing our church stresses is there are basically two commandments: Love the Lord and love your neighbor as yourself. Right now, our neighbors are hurting in so many ways,” Gilbert added.

“We want to make sure they have as much help as they can get in this stressful period. It’s one of the biggest crises people can go through when their very livelihoods are in jeopardy,” he said.

Dobies agreed the church can play a key role in helping people find jobs and also maintaining their self-confidence.

“One of the main things job seekers need is hope — the belief they can find another opportunity and that their lives are not over,” she said.
Michigan priest posts advice to unemployed on parish Web site

BY CAROL ZIMMERMAN

WASHINGTON (CNS) — One of the top items on the parish Web site for St. Joseph Church in Lake Orion, Mich., is certainly a sign of the times.

“Struggling with unemployment? St. Joseph Church can help,” it reads.

The link leads readers to three audio files with speakers offering spiritual and practical advice and discussing the emotional toll of losing a job. The files, scheduled to be posted soon on the site, will discuss job loss from an entirely different perspective: how a manager copes with the task of firing employees.

He said the audio links were something parish leaders thought they should provide as a way to reach out to the church community located near the Chrysler headquarters and a General Motors assembly plant.

The auto industry has faced huge losses this year, and GM in particular has gone through a dramatic reduction of its factory workforce with buyouts and early retirement offers.

In 2003, the company had about 125,000 U.S. employees. By the end of 2008, that number is expected to be 62,500. Earlier this year the company announced it was closing four plants where pickup trucks are built, but it has yet to fully make cuts at factories that produce engines, transmissions and other parts.

Among parishioners at St. Joseph are both managers and factory workers in the auto industry. Although some have lost their jobs, others are in a time of uncertainty, Father Verschaeve told Catholic News Service in a Nov. 10 telephone interview.

“We’re waiting for the other shoe to drop — what will happen with Chrysler and General Motors,” he said, noting that more job cuts are anticipated.

The priest said the mood was “very much” as people waited and wondered if they should take the proposed buyouts.

Yet amid the economic uncertainty, parish giving has not decreased. “People are still generous,” he said, adding that in tough times “people turn to the church and focus on things that are important.”

Father Verschaeve, who delivers the Web audio address on “The Spiritual Challenges of Being Unemployed” on the parish site, advised listeners to “cry out to God” with their complaints, saying it is “good for the soul.”

He also urged them to find strength in God and others and to recognize that “sometimes after traumatic events we can find moments of grace. … A new challenge to grow emerges.”

That’s the message Father Verschaeve is sharing with his parishioners this Advent season.

“…that they would be coherent with their professed faith,” morally upright, professional and passionate about serving the common good …”

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The Catholic Church must strengthen its efforts to educate and assist lay Catholics involved in politics so that the positions they hold and the policies they promote reflect the values of the faith they profess, Pope Benedict XVI said.

Meeting with members of the Pontifical Council for the Laity Nov. 15, the pope emphasized the need to educate lay Catholics to play their proper role in building a world of justice, charity and protection of human rights.

“In a special way, I reaffirm the necessity and urgency of the evangelical formation and pastoral accompaniment of a new generation of Catholics involved in politics, that they would be coherent with their professed faith,” morally upright, professional and passionate about serving the common good, he said.

Laypeople are called to fulfill their mission as followers and witnesses to Christ in government, social life, workplaces, schools and families, the pope said.

“Every environment, circumstance and activity in which we hope will shine the unity between faith and life is entrusted to the responsibility of the lay faithful, moved by a desire to communicate the gift of encounters with Christ and the certainty of the dignity of the human person,” the pope said.

Pope Benedict also praised the council for the lay’s commitment to promoting the dignity and participation of women in the church and in the world.

“Man and woman, equal in dignity, are called to participate each other in communion and collaboration, not only in marriage and family life, but also in society,” he said.

“One can never say enough about how much the church recognizes, appreciates and values the participation of women in its mission of spreading the Gospel,” the pope said.
By receiving Eucharist, Catholics can ‘transform world,’ bishop says

St. Louis (CNS) — The purpose of the Eucharist is seen in the actions of the saints, Bishop Paul A. Zipf of Bismarck, N.D., told a gathering at the Gateway Liturgy Center in St. Louis Nov. 7. “The bread and wine are transformed in order to transform us so that we can transform the world,” he said during the annual conference sponsored by the St. Louis archdiocesan Office of Sacred Worship. Using St. Francis as an example, he said: “He regularly received the Lord and was changed. Then, he was able to change the world by his life and love.” He was able to perceive Christ’s presence in everyone, and people, in turn, could see Christ’s presence in him.” Bishop Zipf also used the example of Blessed Mother Teresa of Calcutta, India. When asked how she was able to care for the poorest of the poor without becoming burned out, she responded by simply pointing to prayer before the Eucharist, he said. Dsubtract Zipf is a native of St. Louis who was an educator, parish pastor and auxiliary bishop of the archdiocese before being named to the North Dakota diocese in 1996.

Vatican newspaper says economic experts are confusing consumers

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In the midst of a financial situation of great uncertainty, consumers have a right to be confused, said an article in the Vatican newspaper. Too many so-called experts are telling consumers “the infallible remedy for overcoming the risk of poverty caused by the economic crisis under way” is to “spend, consume and go into debt to keep the econ- omy going,” said the article in L’Osservatore Romano. But, the Nov. 17 article said, basically what the experts are saying is that “to overcome the crisis it is necessary to continue the same behavior that caused our problems: consumption and indebtedness.”

The article was written by Ettore Gotti Tedeschi, an Italian banker and a professor of financial ethics at the Catholic University of the Sacred Heart in Milan. He said people are right to be confused and even frightened when the same experts encouraging them to keep spending say that “a recession is under way and the worst is yet to come.”

FBI investigating white powder mailed to Knights’ headquarters

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (CNS) — A mailroom and printing plant at the Knights of Columbus headquarters in New York was closed Nov. 14 while the local FBI office investigated a white powder contained in an envelope mailed from California. David Rhieu, chief division counsel at the FBI office in New Haven, said Nov. 14 that the testing of the powder would be completed within 48 hours and “the results will be released to the victim, the Knights of Columbus.”

Rhieu said that while the investi- gation was ongoing he could not comment on whether the letter containing the powder could be linked to similar envelopes received at the national headquar- ters of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Salt Lake City and a Mormon temple in Los Angeles. Patrick Korten, Knights of Columbus vice president for communications, told Catholic News Service Nov. 14 that the let- ter was received in the Knights’ mailroom on the morning of Nov. 13 and “produced a white powder when opened.” Local police and fire officials were notified and eventually the FBI was brought in, he said. “Three individuals were decontaminated” following the incident, and the mailroom and printing plant were to remain closed until Monday, Korten said.

Withholding nutrition, hydration kills, say Vatican officials

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Withholding nutrition and hydration from a woman in a persistent vegetative state is a serious, inadmissible attack on life, said two Vatican officials. Italy’s top appeals court confirmed Nov. 13 to overturn a lower-court decision allowing the withdrawal of the nasogastric tube that has kept Eliana Englaro alive for more than 16 years. For years, Englaro’s father had been pursuing a legal battle to allow his daughter to die. She was injured in a car accident in 1992. Archbishop Salvatore Fisichella, president of the Pontifical Academy for Life, told reporters: “It is a very serious decision. It is a big defeat for everyone.” Cardinal Javier Lozano Barragan, president of the Pontifical Council for Health Care Ministry, told reporters that, while the Catholic Church does not insist that extraordinary measures be taken to keep a dying person alive, nutrition and hydration “are not extraordinary therapies that can be suspended. Interrupting them is equivalent to killing her.”

Priest’s remarks on Obama voters said not to reflect church teaching

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The administrator of the Diocese of Charleston, S.C., said a pastor who told his parishioners they should refrain from receiving holy Communion if they voted for President-elect Barack Obama did not “adequately reflect the Catholic Church’s teaching” on abortion and conscience. “Any statements or comments to the contrary are repudiated,” Msgr. Martin T. Laughlin said in a Nov. 14 statement. Father Jay Scott Newman of St. Mary’s Church in Greenville, S.C., said in a letter to his parishioners that Catholics who voted for Obama, who sup- ports legalized abortion, would have to be reconciled with God through the sacrament of penance before faithfully receiving Communion again. The letter was published on the front page of the parish bulletin Nov. 8-9. Msgr. Laughlin said that Father Newman’s comments “diverted the church’s clear teaching on abortion” by pulling it into the “partisan political arena.” Quoting the Catechism of the Catholic Church, Msgr. Laughlin said that Christ gives everyone “the free- dom to explore our own con- science and to make our own deci- sions while adhering to the law of God and the teachings of the faith.”

U.S. Army returns college in Baghdad to Chaldean Catholic Church

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The U.S. Army has returned the Pontifical Babel College for Philosophy and Theology in Baghdad to the Chaldean Catholic Church, promising to repair or replace anything damaged while the students were in the building. Cardinal Maximinus, metropolitan of the Syriac Catholic Church, said Nov. 12 at a press conference that the college “will be closed until Monday, Korten said.
Mission societies, is a children’s society. On Nov. 10, 2008, the Pontifical Mission Societies, an international research and education organization, released a report on World Mission Sunday in September of 2008, reports Phillip Widmann, who served as the director of the Pontifical Mission Societies and the Pontifical Missionary Aid Society where children’s aid agency. The mission of the Pontifical Mission Societies is to support God, the church and the world. The selection of the top 50 is determined by an advisory board comprised of Catholic colleges and universities. Included on the board is Professor Gerard Bradley, professor of law at the University of Notre Dame Law School. Another advisory board member Father David M. O’Connell, president of Catholic University of America said the Honor Roll’s evaluation method is indispensable. “Catholic schools must examine themselves on a regular basis using a well-rounded approach that assesses adherence to the church’s educational calling.”

The Pontifical mission societies offer support

The Pontifical Society for the Propagation of the Faith, an arm of the Pontifical Mission Societies, supports the Catholic church’s worldwide missionary efforts by accepting contributions from the faithful of the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend. Total contributions for the three-year calendar year reached $86,441. Father Philip Widmann, who served as director of the society from 1995 to September of 2008, reports that these funds, gathered on World Mission Sunday in October, are dispersed to missionaries around the world.

Also under the umbrella of Pontifical Mission Societies is the Missionaries of Charity Sisters of Mercy of the Americas (MC), which supports individual missionaries, including those local religious orders and foreign priests who support their home lands parishes, who request an opportunity once a year to present their diocese. The total collected for the Mission Coop in 2007 was $278,636.85.

Holy Childhood Association, another arm of the mission societies, is a children’s missionary aid society where children help children. The donations benefit children with not only basic survival needs but also opportunities to receive instruction in the faith. For the school year of 2007-2008, the children of the diocese contributed a total of $3,996.67.

Dr. Kathleen Schneider, who has worked closely with Father Widmann for five years, has recently been appointed as the new diocesan director of The Pontifical Mission Societies and will oversee The Pontifical Society for the Propagation of the Faith, the Mission Cooperative Plan and the Holy Childhood Association. In addition to working directly with the parishes and the missionaries, her hope as director is to heighten awareness of mission work among the youth of the diocese through education.

Bishop Luers’ students recognized

FORT WAYNE — Bishop Luers High School in Fort Wayne has announced the following student achievements.

Junior Corinne Lambert was elected as a National Council Delegate for the 2008 Girls Scout National Council Session, 51st Convention in Indianapolis. As an elected delegate, Lambert accepted the responsibility of being a voting member of the national organization and learned about the democratic process in Girl Scouting.

Junior Brittany Croy has applied to attend the Molecular Medicine, in Action Conference held on the campus of IUPUI (Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis) during March 1-2, 2009. Only 50 Indiana high-school students will receive the opportunity to participate. These selected students will work alongside some of the nation’s top researchers in the labs of the Herman B. Wells Center for Pediatric Research.

Hope Ministries hosts open house

SOUTH BEND — The community is invited to celebrate the Christmas season with the residents and staff of Hope Ministries’ Family Life Center during the Home for the Holidays open house on Dec. 13, from 4-8 p.m. Hope Ministries Family Life Center is located at 432 South Lafayette Blvd. While touring the Family Life Center and learning about the needs of Hope residents, guests will enjoy live Christmas music, cookies and cocoa, a Christmas bazaar, activities for kids, festive decorations and make-and-take crafts. Anyone interested in volunteer opportunities or donation needs for this event, please contact Sarah Greenawalt at (574) 235-4150, ext. 231 or sgreenawalt@hopebs.org.

Opportunities are also available for those interested in advertising their business or honoring a loved one to sponsor and decorate a tree or wreath to be displayed at the Home for the Holidays open house. For information regarding sponsorships, please contact Dennis Brown at (574) 235-4150, ext. 244 or dbrown@hopebs.org.

Holy Cross College students accepting donations for Thanksgiving baskets

NOTRE DAME — With the help of the St. Vincent DePaul Society of South Bend, students at Holy Cross College have selected deserving families in the Michiana area to receive Thanksgiving baskets complete with everything to make a traditional family feast.

This is the eighth year the Social Concerns Committee at Holy Cross has raised money for this project. Because of the economic situation this year they are not asking local businesses to donate, but are collecting from a variety of other sources — pocket change from students and donations from faculty, parents, alums, neighbors and friends.

The committee is accepting donations until Friday, Nov. 21. Later that day, students will use the money at the local Meijers to fill the baskets with turkey, stuffing, cranberry sauce, canned vegetables, dinner rolls and pumpkin pie. Checks may be made payable to Holy Cross College with Social Concerns noted in the memo. For more information contact Social Concerns President Nicole Molnar at nmolnar@hcc-nd.edu. Mail donations to the Social Concerns Committee, Holy Cross College, 1108 South Main St., Elkhart 46515.

Advent service an ecumenical event in Elkhart

ELKHART — Christians from many churches joining together to celebrate the event that unites us all — the birth of Christ. It’s with that spirit that the Ninth Annual Ecumenical Advent Lessons and Carols program is held at St. Vincent de Paul Church, 1108 South Main St., Elkhart.

The program is always held the first Sunday of Advent, which falls on Nov. 30 this year. The service traces salvation history from creation to the foretelling of the birth of Christ through Scripture.

Lucy Minichillo, music director at St. Vincent, explained how the program began.

Minichillo said in 1997 the choir at St. Vincent joined with St. Thomas’ parish choir for an Advent service and at that time someone suggested it should be ecumenical. Minichillo said when she became full time music director in 1999 she wanted to make that ecumenical service a reality. She took a group of students but in 2000 they held their first service.

Over the years the choir has continued to grow, currently representing 18 different churches including Mennonite, Lutheran, Episcopalian, Methodist, Nazarene and United Church of Christ with some clergy and lay members participating in the choir and as readers. The 64-member ecumenical choir is under the direction of Walter Ginter, retired from the Notre Dame music department, according to Minichillo.

The program is also bilingual with a variety of music, readings and prayers in Spanish. The program will be held from 5-6 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

There will be a free will offering collection for Church Community Services, Elkhart, a non-denominational organization that offers job training, mentoring and food pantry. There will also be a collection of nonperishable food items for the food pantry at CCS.

— Denise Fedorow

The Painted Turtle Drummers provided authentic sounds, traditional dress and an explanation of Miami Indian traditions at St. John the Baptist, Fort Wayne, grade school. Some of the teachers and students were privileged to participate in traditional dance steps that were similar to a combination of square dancing and a line dance. The program tied into the Thanksgiving season because the Miami Indian descendants “must have a heart that is clean and they must be thankful” before they are allowed to play on the drum.
ICC launches online tool for Catholic grassroots effort

INDIANAPOLIS — Catholics across Indiana are engaged in a new and powerful way through an online tool offered by the Indiana Catholic Conference.

Capitol Action, the software tool launched by the Indiana Catholic Conference, now available on the ICC Web page, allows visitors to enter a Legislative Action Center and engage in a variety of grassroots activities in a few simple keystrokes. One of the key features of the software allows visitors to quickly identify and contact their elected officials.

By clicking “Legislative Action Center” on the ICC home page, the visitor has information and quick access to government officials. The center includes these choices: elected officials, issues, election and media. Under the “Elected Officials” menu, for example, visitors are able to access the “Indiana Legislative Directory” to select “President” to access the president of the U.S., federal agencies and a congressional directory, or select the “Supreme Court” for contact information for the U.S. Supreme Court.

In addition to contact information for each office holder, biographical information and links to other useful Web pages for individual members of the Indiana General Assembly, or the U.S. Congress, governmental agencies and the U.S. Supreme Court are available.

Visitors to the center also have the option to join the action network. By joining the action network, visitors are personalized, resulting in over 60 years. You can trust us to do it just right.

Fort Wayne's Most Complete Wedding Service.
Banquet Rooms
Hotel Rooms
Rehearsal Dinners
Catering Service
Wedding Cakes

COLUMBUS, Ohio — On Nov. 8, 25 seminarians from 11 different dioceses were instituted into the liturgical ministries of reader or acolyte at the Pontifical College Josephinum by the Bishop Daniel R. Jenky, CSC, bishop of Peoria. The installation Mass was celebrated in St. Turibius Chapel in the company of visiting priests, families of the candidates, as well as benefactors and friends of the Josephinum.

Once termed minor orders, the positions of reader and acolyte are conferred to first and second year theology students. First-year theology students installed as readers are commissioned to proclaim the word of God in the liturgical assembly and to catechize the faithful. During the liturgy, the candidates knelt before Bishop Jenky, who held out a Bible to them and said, “Take this vessel of holy Scripture, and be faithful in handing on the word of God so that it may grow strong in the hearts of his people.”

The candidates for acolytes, who are second-year theologians, were entrusted with the duties of attending to the altar, assisting the deacon and priest at Mass and distributing holy Communion as an extraordinary minister. They may also expose the Blessed Sacrament for adoration. The candidates approached the bishop and knelt before him as he held a paten of bread and said, “Take this vessel with bread for the celebration of the Eucharist. Make your life worthy of your service at the table of the Lord and of his Church.”

The Josephinum serves an average of 30 dioceses — national and international — each year. Seminarians from 11 dioceses received ministries during the liturgy. Alexandria, Brownsville, Columbus, Covington, Fort Wayne-South Bend, Gaylord, Kalamazoo, Peoria, Steubenville, Tyler and Youngstown.
Congratulations to Saint Aloysius Parish on the approaching sesquicentennial celebration of its founding in 1859.

Please pray for the continued success of our parish and school
Local artists offer art, serve community food bank

BY KAY COZAD

FORT WAYNE — Many art collectors in the Midwest area travel to Chicago or Indianapolis to view and buy high quality professional art. Some local artists want them to know that they no longer have to travel long distances. The best kept secret in Fort Wayne, they say, is the creative talent right here at home.

Santa Brink, one of those local artists, has teamed with 20 other gifted artisans to offer their creations in a unique venue on the southwest side. Artworks Holiday Art Gallery, now open at Jefferson Pointe shopping mall, is a collection of fine art for holiday purchases. The store, next to Barnes and Noble Bookstore, is tastefully laid out displaying a multitude of media including original handmade jewelry, pottery, photography, blown glass, paintings, sculpture, unique clothing, hand-painted bags and more from award winning artists.

But more than promoting the local artists and offering the community the unique experience of perusing this fine art right here in Fort Wayne, this venture is a heartfelt community outreach. The artists have joined together to donate a portion of the proceeds of all sales to the Community Harvest Food Bank.

“I've always been involved with charity,” says Brink, parishioner of St. Elizabeth Ann Seton Parish, Fort Wayne, who has worked with art events that benefited local organizations such as the Sparrow Children's Oncology Unit at Lutheran Hospital. Working with Jefferson Pointe this past October with the art festival proved a congenial partnership, she says, adding that they agreed to her idea of combining art and charity. And with help from volunteers and artists she had the Artworks Holiday Art Gallery open for business within a week and a half of the holidays.

When asked why she chose Community Harvest Food Bank as a recipient, Brink says, “They are in need in these economic times and they are a solid organization. There are no negatives about giving food to people.”

Acquiring the commited artists to join in this community outreach was surprisingly easy, says Brink, who sent a mass e-mail out to artists in the area. Those who received the invitation called in other artists, and within days, 20 had joined forces. “They all said, ‘How cool is this?’” says Brink, who has been pleased with the artists’ response. “It’s been a collaborative effort by a lot of good souls together.” Each artist is required to donate their time to man the store according to their schedules.

One of the responding artists is MaryAnn Halsey, whose vibrant watercolor paintings adorn the walls of the newly opened gallery. Her hand-painted bags, wallets and purses are on display as well. Of the project she says, “It’s an adventure to promote our art and a great way to give back to the community for the food bank, especially now during the holidays. There are so many people in need.”

In developing her art work, Halsey, a part-time speech pathologist and parishioner of St. Elizabeth Parish as well, has found a new depth to her faith. “I had prayed on it. I say, ‘You’re (God) in Forte. I have always believed that this is a partnership in his art. He wants me to do this ... to move this visual art onto paper.’

Another artist involved in the outreach project is Bonnie Manning, yet another St. Elizabeth parishioner, who retired from the postal service. Her media is photography, which has been displayed at several of the local art festivals. Stunningunalshotscaptivate the viewer as they stroll through the store. She feels the gallery is more than a store, saying, “It’s like visiting a museum when you’re shopping. That’s what I like about it — it’s a gallery and a store. It’s a mini adventure — an ‘out-of-town experience in town.’

Though these three talented women work at different times, the gallery is a vivid ecumenical effort. “There are so many faith perspectives here, with similar spirit. They are all just giving and amazing. And everyone is so supportive,” said Brink.

The faithful and busy Brink is executive director of Santa Brink and Associates, a child advocacy consultation firm and is employed by the South Bend office of Proactive Business Interiors as business development consultant as well.

A food and wine reception was held on Nov. 16, Brink’s 60th birthday. The successful effort included a silent auction and, of course, monetary donations, and those of nonperishable food items were graciously accepted for the food bank.

The artists plan another reception on Dec. 6 from 5-8 p.m. for partygoers. “It is an open to the public and Brink says, “We are serving more than one meal these days. It is a unique experience and we gladly accept food products or donations at the store. People can come and buy gifts here and give to the food bank. It’s a great concept!”

‘God writes straight with crooked lines’

Prison pen pal provides priest presider for Mass

BY VINCE LARRABEBA

MISHAWAKA — It’s been nearly four years since a prisoner named Ken at the Indiana State Prison in Michigan City sent a letter to Sister Agnes Marie Regan of the Sisters of St. Francis of Perpetual Adoration, Mishawaka.

When she opened the curious envelope adored with smiley faces, Sister Agnes was invited to become a pen pal with Ken, who was making a ministry in prison of sending “homemade” cards to others while serving a 6-year sentence for burglary (Today’s Catholic, March 18, 2007).

Sister Agnes came to Ken’s attention and about 80 other prison inmates who watched her introduce the half-hour Sunday TV Mass on the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend on WNDU TV, Channel 16, at 10:30 a.m. The prisoners were participating in a “St. Dismas Community within the Walls” group, which shortly weekly to watch the TV Mass and study the Bible. To the inmates, and many others throughout the South Bend viewing area, Sister Agnes simply is known as the “TV Mass Sister.”

Not only did Sister Agnes agree to begin corresponding with Ken regularly, she later also worked-up the courage to accept his invitation to accompany the University of Notre Dame Knights of Columbus and some students on their annual visit to provide a “feast for prisoners.”

Sister Agnes initially traveled with Holy Cross Father Thomas McNally, a priest residing at Our Lady of Fatima House on the Notre Dame campus.

Sister Agnes’ first visit was quite revolutionary, she said. They ate together, took pictures and she picked up two more pen pals. The visit was spiritually successful as well. Sister Agnes attended Mass and prayed with the St. Dismas group, some individually, and blessed an inmate and his rosary.

She also asked God that once each inmate had served the debt he owed society for his crimes, he would become a loving member to his community and a productive member of society.

And, it appears her prayers have been answered, at least in his case. Less than a year after his initial visit to the Michigan City prison, Ken’s lawyer began reviewing his case and found that there was a discrepancy in the sentencing. Instead of six terms of 10 years served consecutively, his sentence would have been served concomitantly. Thus, after serving a total of 14 years behind bars, Ken was released by a judge who ruled that his sentence had been inappropriately administered by a judge who apparently was suffering from the initial stages of dementia.

Ken now resides in South Bend with another former inmate. Both men are attempting to readjust to living in a free society once again. Ken continues to participate in the TV Mass each Sunday, only now he attends in person assisting with the chores surrounding the setup and take-down of the Mass set.

Ken has his own vehicle and comes to the TV Mass on his own. Afterward he goes to Little Flower Parish where he is a parishioner. This month he will begin serving the parish community as a special minister of the Eucharist. He has volunteered, as well, to serve in other programs sponsored by the parish and happily is making friends who are lovingly supporting him as he continues his journey into productive life outside the walls.

Ken always tells Sister Agnes Marie that everything good that has happened and is happening to him is the result of “knee mail,” the growing relationship with God that Father David Link, McNally’s oblate, and Father McNally helped him form when he had nothing but “time” to reflect on the direction of his life.

Sister Agnes sees to it that Ken receives a videotape of the TV Mass each Sunday for further reflection and study. This fall, however, she had to ask Ken if she could take back the previous Sunday’s taped Mass because a priest could not be found to celebrate the Mass live the next Sunday. Ken immediately called Father McNally or the diocesan Catholic Communications Office.

“It looked as though the only thing we could do was air a videotape from the previous Sunday,” Sister Agnes said. When she showed her the tape, the tape returned, he asked, “You need a priest? I’ll get you one!” A simple telephone call and it was arranged. Father McNally would preside at the TV Mass.

“Talk about something going full circle,” Sister Agnes exclaimed. “Imagine, my former prison pen pal provided a priest presider for Mass. That old proverb certainly holds true, ‘God writes straight with crooked lines.’”
Catholic high school philanthropists active in diocese

BY KAREN CLIFFORD

With arms outstretched for lifting boxes, raking leaves, sorting auction items, translating Spanish into English or offering information on fair trade practices, high school students from around the Fort Wayne-South Bend area are on the move. As an expression of giving back to their communities, these students are applying the Catholic concept of social justice by application and service to others.

On Oct. 25, Bishop Dwenger High School held its annual Saints on the Move service project. According to the school’s press release, over 400 families offered to help this year at nearly 150 sites throughout the Fort Wayne area with full cleanup projects for the elderly and home-bound, nursing homes and other social service organizations.

At St. Mary’s Soup Kitchen in downtown Fort Wayne, Bishop Dwenger students helped parish volunteers set up for an evening fundraiser. According to Val Vormdan, fundraiser cochairman, the timing of the Saints on the Move service project was ideal. “The fundraiser includes a dance, silent auction, 50/50 raffle and vendors who donate their time and services. All proceeds go to the soup kitchen. The kids are tremendous in helping us set up for this event,” says Vormdan. The proceeds help supply the kitchen, which often prepares 180 gallons of soup each day, five days a week.

According to soup kitchen volunteer John Martin, in the month of September, 29,301 servings of soup were distributed. Knowing his efforts for Saints on the Move will make a difference in the lives of others, Bishop Dwenger sophomore Jesse Nix notes, “It always feels good to help out the community and those who are less fortunate.”

Emily VanDyck, senior at Bishop Luers High School, assists at the Fort Wayne Christ Child coat drive.

Wharton helped to spruce up the yard by raking leaves. Ave Maria House, owned and operated by St. Mary Parish, is a daytime drop-in shelter for homeless men and women from the Fort Wayne area. Dottie Carpenter, cochairman of the St. Mary’s fundraiser, states that people can come there to “have a cup of coffee, shower, do laundry, or make calls to places of employment.”

Ave Maria House, a high school in the diocese have recently been involved with their town’s Christ Child Society. According to its national mission statement, the Christ Child Society is “a charitable organization dedicated to serving at-risk children regardless of race or creed.” Bishop Luers Spanish IV students reached out to the Christ Child Society to serve as interpreters during a coat drive of the Fort Wayne chapter. Rudy Treviso, a senior at Bishop Luers, “thought the whole program at Sacred Heart is awesome. On the day that I went, we gave out over 250 coats. It was unbelievable to know that a small group of people could help so much in just one morning. Not only is the program beneficial because families receive coats, hats, and gloves, but is a prime example of how anyone can make a difference in the community.”

Across the diocese in South Bend, six junior Civitans from Marian High School, along with Christ Child volunteers, unloaded approximately 250 boxes of coats at the former St. Patrick’s School, the chapter’s new residency. Jan Williams, vice president of clothing for the South Bend chapter of Christ Child, expresses the appreciation she has for the junior Civitans help.

“The teens that helped empty a semi load of new coats into our storage room were a real blessing. Together we were able to restock the second half of our coat inventory, which was rapidly being depleted. Moving a couple thousand coats would have taken our ladies days, with several more days to help our ailing backs. We are very grateful for their ongoing support of the mission to help those less fortunate in this community.”

Marian freshman Connor Burke, who assisted with unloading the boxes, emphasizes the need to offer assistance to those less fortunate. “Some people have crises in their lives and need help to get going again.”

The Catholic concept of social justice was on full display at Saint Joseph’s High School’s Fair Trade Café held Oct. 25. The Fair Trade Café is sponsored by Saint Joseph’s SECO club, which stands for Social and Ecological Concerns Organization.

Kathy Kershner, SECO coordinator and teacher at Saint Joseph’s, says the club is built on the desire to live the church’s teaching of the “seamless garment,” a Catholic social teaching otherwise referred to as the consistent life ethic.

“As the acronym suggests, our concerns are very inclusive and far reaching. We are a social and environmental justice group. We meet twice a week to discuss issues of justice that are of interest to the students. We do individual and group research into social and environmental matters and once educated, try to put our faith in action,” Kershner stresses.

On Halloween, SECO members delivered 100 grams, which are messages that have fair trade chocolate attached. According to literature from Equal Exchange, a Massachusetts worker cooperative, Fair Trade certification “prohibits the use of abusive child labor, and encourages the adoption of safer, chemical free farming methods.”

Anna Ragland, SECO member states the paper that the bog gram messages are written on are from recycled shredded newspaper. “You add water to the shredded newspaper, you sponge it out and it makes paper.” So the concepts of fair trade and helping the environment are both publicized, Anna emphasizes.

“When students become aware of where their garments are produced or where their food is coming from, they often learn it against their Catholic social teaching,” Kershner notes. “By studying the root causes of these problems, we hope to change these structures and have a long term healthy society.”

USF students experience a hint of homelessness

BY LAUREN CAGGIANO

FORT WAYNE — Living the Franciscan theme of fostering peace and justice, University of Saint Francis students are becoming aware of a taste of homelessness the night of Nov. 14.

From 8 p.m. to 8:30 a.m., 12 students slept outside Padua Hall in cardboard box “shanty towns” in the cold November rain. The cardboard boxes are symbolic representations of what it’s like to be homeless, according to Padua Hall director and event organizer David Stamile.

The event, he said, is intended to raise the question: “What would it really be like to be homeless?”

Members of the Fort Wayne community donated coats, hats and blankets, which the students later donated to a local homeless shelter. David Stamile, Padua Hall director and event organizer, said interacting with the homeless face-to-face was an important aspect of the event. “If they have) a greater awareness for where they are,” he said about the student participants. “They can see how blessed they are with the knowledge of how other people live.”

Stamile said he views the sleep-out as both an internal and external example of living the Catholic, Franciscan faith. Inside the university community, he hopes students will become socially aware. And outside St. Francis, the public can learn by example.

Raising awareness about the existence of the local homeless community is one of the first steps to solving the problem, Stamile said. In his observations, he has found that in the city of Fort Wayne the underprivileged seem to be isolated to the southern and eastern parts.

The problem is that “you can go around town and never be aware of the homeless,” he said.

Michael Bechill, a USF graduate and last year’s event coordinator, echoed Stamile’s comment about the need for awareness.

“The best (way to make a difference) is talk,” the student suggested. “Often people ignore things right in front of their eyes because it is easy to turn the other way. This event proves that people care, and everyone can make a difference.”

National Hunger and Homelessness Awareness Week is Nov. 16-22, and students at colleges and universities, including the University of Dayton, have similar efforts planned.

For more information about how you can help combat homelessness, visit www.nationalhomeless.org.
NEW HAVEN — Charity is a well-practiced virtue in the Dennis and Mary Tippmann family. These St. John the Baptist parishioners have raised 11 children to be well-rounded and faithful citizens. For years it has been common practice for the family to donate time, talent and treasure to both local and international charities.

Following the untimely death of son Charlie in 1993, the family formed the Charlie Tippmann Foundation into which the remaining children pooled their funds. Each year a local church or charity was designated to benefit from the proceeds of the foundation. The Tippmann family has been a faithful benefactor of Catholic Relief Services (CRS) for over a decade and recently the children, through the foundation, have supported a special CRS project.

Brad, the oldest at 29, says, “We’ve donated the money to the Children Behind Project for about two years.” This project, he says, facilitated by CRS and partners, is an effort to support orphans and vulnerable children in Africa who have been left behind by the death of one or both parents from AIDS.

With the abundant blessings provided by the family business, Tippmann Industrial Products, Inc., where some of the students work, CRS has funded a CRF program that provides children with educational assistance.

According to the Tippmanns, 25 percent of the population of Kenya has HIV, with 50 percent of the population in some of the communities afflicted with AIDS. “To get tested willingly is a big deal there,” they say. Uganda has reduced the incidence of HIV/AIDS to 6 percent through education and assistance.

Another program that the Tippmanns inspired is the CRS microfinance program offering education on finances and business. “The program helped the community pool their money so they could help each other,” they report. “It is a huge success.”

But the real success, the Tippmanns say, is how the programs effect change in the communities and in families. “They (CRS) are good stewards,” says Brad, adding “They are the experts on helping. They give food and clothes, which are corporal works of mercy, but they get them to be self sufficient too.” He tells of a 58-year-old woman who was proud of her work through the program that had her selling her own garden-grown produce to support the 11 children in her care.

The trip overseas was the first for all five of the Tippmann siblings. Brad returned home with a renewed sense of appreciation.

Anna, says, “It was an inspiration to see the poverty of the people. Some had lost everything, yet they were so hopeful.” Brad agrees, saying, “No matter how bad things are, there’s always hope. You can pray your way through. Compared to what they do daily, we’ve got it really good.”

The kids, they concluded, were the best part of the trip. “They were so excited to see us and would run up and take our hands. They were very playful,” says the group, who visited St. Camillus orphanage in Karunga. The children numbered 600 in the compound, with many more living within the community in homes of friends and relatives. It is reported that these children who were orphaned due to the AIDS epidemic in the country are being raised by older siblings, relatives or community members. One woman the Tippmanns met was raising eight children from a different family.

Ken MacLean, CRS Kenya country representative, says of the Tippmanns’ involvement with CRS, “The donation from the Tippmanns is critical to our program because without resources we cannot launch social change and help some of the world’s poorest people. Their visit itself is so important because it breathes life into the word ‘solidarity.’”

CRS Uganda country representative Jack Norman agrees, saying, “Support from families like the Tippmanns is critical for Catholic Relief Services’ work in the field. With individual donations, CRS can support targeted programs and address gaps in specific geographic or sectoral areas.”

Why go overseas to witness such hardships? Nick says, “I talked to CRS and they told me how ‘we helped and I wanted to see,’” adds Anna, “You hear the numbers but when you go over you can put a face to it.”

David traveled because his father asked him to go and learn. “Once it’s seen first hand, it can’t be ignored. It’s our fellow man suffering, part of Christ’s family. It doesn’t go away.”

Brad reflects, “I knew my family has been blessed many ways through the business and life in general. Going over there ... helped open my eyes and helped me appreciate more of what I have. I want to work a little harder to give a little more.”

CRS is the official overseas relief and development agency of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops and serves the poor and vulnerable in countries like Africa, Asia, Latin America, the Middle East and the United States. According to their Web site 94 percent of funding goes directly into their programs. The overseas outreach offers programs in agriculture, education, health, microfinance, food security and more in an attempt to work with communities and churches to promote self-reliance among those they serve.

For information on Catholic Relief Services visit www.crs.org.

Work for Saint Joe, a gift to help someone in need

BY DIANE FREEBY

SOUTH BEND — “I just wouldn’t be able to complete it by myself. I’m not the gardener my mom practiced on Catholic Relief Services visit,” said Debbie Foy, a mother who’s been involved with Work for Saint Joe for the past 12 years. “We may not hear about it, but it made an impact.”

Adam Lewiecki, 15, said after meeting Michael Denby, who inspired him by Denby, and how he cares for his disabled son. “He was great to be able to work for someone who really needed it,” said Lewiecki, whose group spent an hour raking up leaves and pulling weeds from Denby’s backyard before stopping in for a visit.

This community outreach began first as a neighborhood walk, with students getting sponsors to raise money for Saint Joseph’s High School. According to this year’s coordinator Pam Mahlie, that changed when one student saw a greater need. “That student wrote an essay in class,” Mahlie recalled, “saying we should help people in the neighborhoods, not just walk through them.”

South Bend resident Chester Denby grins as Saint Joseph’s High School sophomores Will O’Callaghan and Adam Lewiecki go after the weeds in his garden.

“Walk for Saint Joe” was born, and, last Sunday, over 500 students and about 100 parents participated. Parents served as drivers and chaperones, and supervised the kids as they worked together at homes and businesses throughout South Bend.

“At the St. Camillus compound, from left, are Jim Lund, vice president of charitable giving, Anna, Ken MacLean, the man in charge of Nairobi, Max, Brad, Nick and Dave Tippmann.”

It’s a very humbling experience,” said Mahlie. “We thank God that we have a chance to serve others, particularly the elderly and physically and mentally disabled who need our help.”

The students, with all their youthful enthusiasm, seem to get a lot more out of the experience than a few service hours. Senior Molly Ryal says she’s participated all four years at Saint Joseph’s. “It’s really great!” she exclaimed. “In the morning, when you wake up and realize you have a lot of work ahead of you, it’s a little humbling when you get going and you know people really appreciate it.”

Foy says she appreciates the chance for students and parents to work together to help the community.

“Both are all about getting out there and doing something for others,” said Foy. “That’s why we send our kids to Saint Joe. That’s what we want to teach them.”

For his part, Denby said he just enjoyed having the kids take care of a little yard work and come meet his son.

“I’m extremely appreciative and grateful to them for taking their time to help me out,” said Denby. “It’s a wonderful gift!”

Siblings witness charity firsthand in Africa

BY KAY COZAD

NEW HAVEN — Charity is a well-practiced virtue in the Dennis and Mary Tippmann family. These St. John the Baptist parishioners have raised 11 children to be well-rounded and faithful citizens. For years it has been common practice for the family to donate time, talent and treasure to both local and international charities. Following the untimely death of son Charlie in 1993, the family formed the Charlie Tippmann Foundation into which the remaining children pooled their funds. Each year a local church or charity was designated to benefit from the proceeds of the foundation. The Tippmann family has been a faithful benefactor of Catholic Relief Services (CRS) for over a decade and recently the children, through the foundation, have supported a special CRS project.

Brad, the oldest at 29, says, “We’ve donated the money to the Children Behind Project for about two years.” This project, he says, facilitated by CRS and partners, is an effort to support orphans and vulnerable children in Africa who have been left behind by the death of one or both parents from AIDS.

With the abundant blessings provided by the family business, Tippmann Industrial Products, Inc., where some of the students work, CRS has funded a CRF program that provides children with educational assistance.

According to the Tippmanns, 25 percent of the population of Kenya has HIV, with 50 percent of the population in some of the communities afflicted with AIDS. “To get tested willingly is a big deal there,” they say. Uganda has reduced the incidence of HIV/AIDS to 6 percent through education and assistance.

Another program that the Tippmanns inspired is the CRS microfinance program offering education on finances and business. “The program helped the community pool their money so they could help each other,” they report. “It is a huge success.”

But the real success, the Tippmanns say, is how the programs effect change in the communities and in families. “They (CRS) are good stewards,” says Brad, adding “They are the experts on helping. They give food and clothes, which are corporal works of mercy, but they get them to be self sufficient too.” He tells of a 58-year-old woman who was proud of her work through the program that had her selling her own garden-grown produce to support the 11 children in her care.

The trip overseas was the first for all five of the Tippmann siblings. Brad returned home with a renewed sense of appreciation.

Anna, says, “It was an inspiration to see the poverty of the people. Some had lost everything, yet they were so hopeful.” Brad agrees, saying, “No matter how bad things are, there’s always hope. You can pray your way through. Compared to what they do daily, we’ve got it really good.”

The kids, they concluded, were the best part of the trip. “They were so excited to see us and would run up and take our hands. They were very playful,” says the group, who visited St. Camillus orphanage in Karunga. The children numbered 600 in the compound, with many more living within the community in homes of friends and relatives. It is reported that these children who were orphaned due to the AIDS epidemic in the country are being raised by older siblings, relatives or community members. One woman the Tippmanns met was raising eight children from a different family.

Ken MacLean, CRS Kenya country representative, says of the Tippmanns’ involvement with CRS, “The donation from the Tippmanns is critical to our program because without resources we cannot launch social change and help some of the world’s poorest people. Their visit itself is so important because it breathes life into the word ‘solidarity.’”

CRS Uganda country representative Jack Norman agrees, saying, “Support from families like the Tippmanns is critical for Catholic Relief Services’ work in the field. With individual donations, CRS can support targeted programs and address gaps in specific geographic or sectoral areas.”

Why go overseas to witness such hardships? Nick says, “I talked to CRS and they told me how ‘we helped and I wanted to see,’” adds Anna, “You hear the numbers but when you go over you can put a face to it.”

David traveled because his father asked him to go and learn. “Once it’s seen first hand, it can’t be ignored. It’s our fellow man suffering, part of Christ’s family. It doesn’t go away.”

Brad reflects, “I knew my family has been blessed many ways through the business and life in general. Going over there ... helped open my eyes and helped me appreciate more of what I have. I want to work a little harder to give a little more.”

CRS is the official overseas relief and development agency of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops and serves the poor and vulnerable in countries like Africa, Asia, Latin America, the Middle East and the United States. According to their Web site 94 percent of funding goes directly into their programs. The overseas outreach offers programs in agriculture, education, health, microfinance, food security and more in an attempt to work with communities and churches to promote self-reliance among those they serve.

For information on Catholic Relief Services visit www.crs.org.
Before voter registration issues, CCHD had cut off ACORN funds

BY PATRICIA ZAPOR

BALTIMORE (CNS) — The Catholic Campaign for Human Development cut off funding earlier this year because the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now, known as ACORN, for reasons unrelated to the organization’s work, had “systematically slashed over voter registration and partisan politics,” the national director said.

In a report to the bishops Nov. 11 during their annual fall meeting in Baltimore, Auxiliary Bishop Roger P. Morn of New Orleans explained that CCHD, the U.S. bishops’ domestic anti-poverty program that funds community development programs around the country, this summer suspended $1.13 million in previously authorized grants to ACORN affiliates.

No new applications from ACORN for the coming year were approved.

ACORN has been under scrutiny in the last few months, most visibly for problems with its voter registration efforts. ACORN’s voter registration programs in several states are being investigated after some of its workers were found to have made up names on registration forms. The false names were discovered before the forms were turned in to government entities.

But Bishop Morn explained that the CCHD action followed the revelation June 2 that Dale Rathke, the brother of ACORN founder Wade Rathke, had embezzled nearly $1 million from the organization and its affiliates in 1999 and 2000.

Dale Rathke stepped down from his position with the national organization in June when the matter became public; no charges were filed against him.

That revelation “raised questions about transparency and governance of ACORN,” Bishop Morn told the bishops. CCHD commissioned a forensic audit to determine whether any of the church’s funds had been stolen or used inappropriately. The final report of the auditors is still pending, but he said the work so far has concluded that “our funds were not involved with those embezzled at the national office.”

Though financial accounting at the national level of ACORN was apparently flawed, the bishop said CCHD funds for local programs did reach the intended recipients. Nevertheless, Bishop Morn said, “we thought it important” to remove ACORN affiliates from CCHD funding.

At a press conference following the session with the bishops, Bishop Morn said ACORN’s organization is so complex that “we couldn’t feel assured that we could vet all of (the individual affiliates) to work with them.”

CCHD grants to ACORN affiliates have in the past funded local programs to create job opportunities and to combat low wages and crime, he said. Recent projects to receive CCHD funds included programs to improve housing opportunities for the poor and raise funds for Hurricane Katrina relief.

CCHD helps give people tools to get out of poverty

BY BRITNEY SEEGERS

FORT WAYNE — The Catholic Campaign for Human Development (CCHD) is the national program in the Catholic Church with the goal of eliminating poverty and bringing about social justice in the United States. Its mission is to address the root causes of poverty in America. This organization was brought to life in 1969 by the U.S. Catholic Bishops and their ideas of empowerment and social justice for the poor have been adapted by many dioceses in the United States including our own diocese of Fort Wayne/South Bend.

Every year in November on the Sunday before Thanksgiving, churches throughout the United States take up a collection to benefit the efforts of CCHD. Some of the money that is collected stays right here in our diocese, and the rest of it goes to the national office for larger national grants.

CCHD carefully monitors funded organizations throughout the country. Each organization must meet certain requirements in order to apply for the grant from CCHD. Some of these requirements are: having a mission statement, demonstrating the intention to eliminate the root causes of poverty, and people living in poverty must have the dominant voice in the organization. These are some of the stipulations that the organization must follow in order to be considered for a grant. The organizations in our area that have received these grants are TAP and Vincent Village.

Brian Stevens, a grant representative from the national headquarters, visited some of these organizations in our diocese as part of the monitoring process back in September. TAP, a community organizing group based at St. Adalbert’s in South Bend is a very diverse group because there are people from many different denominations that are all coming together for a common purpose. The members of TAP are working together on issues such as making the schools a better place for their children and racial discrimination. It is inspiring to see all these people of different faiths and walks of life come together and working toward a common goal.

Vincent Village is also a CCHD funded project based in Fort Wayne. This organization offers affordable transitional housing for homeless families in the area. Since Vincent Village opened in December of 1989, they have served over 590 families and developed additional programs to meet the needs of homeless families with children. Strong families build strong communities. Not only is Vincent Village helping the lives of families, but they are also transforming the community around them.

Through these organizations, as well as others in the community, the grant from CCHD is making a positive influence on the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend. The national collection is coming up on Sunday, Nov. 23. Prayerfully consider giving a gift that makes a difference in the community. There is an old saying, “If you give a child a fish, you feed him for a day. If you teach a child to fish, you fish for him life.” CCHD helps give people the tools they need to get out of poverty, not just address their temporary needs.

CCHD

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1

out of our shelter into housing and affordable furnishings for low-income families. At the same time we are developing comprehensive opportunities for the homeless,” Helmke said. “It’s kind of a neat place.

The economic downturn has impacted Vincent Village. “We’re getting it from both ends, more homeless families needing help and less funding,” Helmke said. “We’re really struggling to make ends meet.”

Vincent Village has been forced to cut its workforce. They recently went through a network of resources to cut expenses. Helmke said she would welcome volunteers to work the front desk. The families in the shelter are used to just having someone to talk to. Often these volunteers just have to be good listeners and encourage the families for the families in the shelter.

The financial crisis has also impacted those who donate stocks to nonprofits as stock value plummet. Helmke encouraged people to examine their favorite charities and include in their charity that helps with basic needs — provides food, offers shelter — and make that a part of their tax strategy. Besides monetary help, there are other material needs — towels and linens, hygiene products such as deodorants, catheters and supplies and disinfectants. These are items that Vincent Village offers in a welcome bag that lets its guests can take with them when they transition out of the shelter.

“We always, always, need dia- pers,” Helmke said. “Sixty-eight percent of the people coming through our door at the homeless shelter are children — babies and children — or pregnant moms.”

Readers may wonder where the 50 people on the waiting lists are living. Helmke said they are either at the YWCA Shelter for Victims
Let us be thankful

In a recent weekday Gospel (Lk 17:11-19), an otherwise unnamed leper returns to Jesus after having been healed by his power, returns to offer thanks to Jesus. The Lord indicates that it is his faith that made him well. The response to the faith of the leper is simple. The leper is healed. His faith is the cause of his healing.

Worship, the adoration and praise of Almighty God, and thanksgiving are essential week-long components of eucharistic celebration, as well as the act of faith. Perhaps too often we think of faith in terms of its intellectual or fiducial dimensions (knowing and trusting God) and these are certainly essential dimensions of the act of faith. However, to be a Christian means to make it clear that worship and gratitude are also essential dimensions of faith. Far too often our “faith” lacks the fullness of such worship and gratitude.

It is not that God “needs” our worship — God is not needy of anything from us. It’s that we do. That is, worship radically shapes the one who prays — it is transformative. Those who live in personal communion with God in Christ cannot but be changed by that experience.

St. Irenaeus held that the primal sin of humanity was ingratitude to God. He saw Adam and Eve as children growing up in Eden, impatient with and ungrateful for God’s plan to bring them up, as it were. Perhaps we need to think more deeply about both these things: we are for God, that God has done for us.

As the financial crisis continues and looms even more threateningly, perhaps we have put far too much stock in the promised economic prosperity to keep us happy. The teaching of the New Testament about wealth is that it’s dangerous — not in itself — but in its capacity to create in us a false sense of independence and security, when in fact the truth is that because we are God’s children, and because God is rich, we can do without the material things we need.

As a nation, this week we stop to offer thanks. Catholics, in fact, do this not only on a particular Thursday in November each year, but daily at the altar of sacrifice, where Christ’s love and mercy are made present and he gives himself to us so that we might give ourselves more to him. To be a Catholic is to be shaped and shaped dramatically by the Eucharist, not merely occasionally but (and this is true whether one has the opportunity to attend daily Mass or not) daily, not just seasonally, but at all times. Perhaps you might think of attending Mass on Thanksgiving Day. You can do this in your parish, as you stop to thank what God, in his great mercy, has done for you and to give him thanks and praise.

Thank you for walk-a-thon support

Mary Keefor, principal of Bishop Luers, joins students and staff in thanking those who supported the 27th Annual Walk-a-thon on Oct. 3. The students worked hard to get their pledges and countless parents volunteered their time and talents for the day. The walk-a-thon not only raised money for the school, but also taught Bishop Luers students about the importance of giving to help others. Prayers were greatly appreciated as the goal of $47,000 was reached. Bishop Luers staff and students could not have accomplished this without the support of our community. Thank you for supporting Bishop Luers High School.

Mary Keefor, Principal Bishop Luers High School Fort Wayne

Combined classes works

The Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend has held discussions for three school mergers. In an article in Today’s Catholic, the superintendent of schools for the diocese stated “our schools in this region operating with classes combined because of low enrollment in high schools to support one class per grade, students mass out on the academic and spiritual aspects of our faith education for.” (Oct. 26, 2008)

There seems to be a misconception about schools in this region that share two grades or combined classrooms. One unfamiliar with the diocesan curriculum for our combined classroom taught by one teacher may misunderstand the fulfillment of an education a child would receive in this setting. Subjects such as religion, reading, math and language arts are taught to the specific grade level. Science, social studies and writing are taught in a homeroom group with both grades learning the same material. Since the students are sharing the same teacher every two years, one the students receive sixth grade level social studies and fifth grade level science. The next year the students receive the opposite, fifth grade level social studies and sixth grade level science. After two years, the students receive the same education as others in a single grade classroom.

One may think that with two grades in a classroom the education or learning material may be reduced to accommodate for two levels. This is not the case. The combined classroom also teaches the five or more subjects a day but the teachers have worked hard to make the teaching of the student the end of the day, but they are still receiving the full education for which their parents pay.

In fact the children are receiving more individual attention from the teacher because they are part of a low num- ber of students in the classroom. The one-on-one time is used to help any struggling children understand the new concepts. If there is any complaint about small class sizes, the realization is this is not a child left behind in confusion.

Students are not “missing out” on an academic or spiritual education at smaller schools where teachers have more interaction with the students. There is no dropping the success of education when looking at above average ISTEP+ scores at these smaller schools. This clarification can clear up any misconceptions of a classroom with two grades. We need to continue to keep up to our rep- utation as Catholic schools that provide individual attention to our students.

Amy Smith, Decatur

Closing small schools is unwarranted

The recent recommendation to close some of our outlying small schools is unwarranted.

Since these south side schools are not currently in a financial crisis, nor have they become a burden on the diocese, the committee’s main con- cern should be the quality of education and our ability to evangelize.

Have we forgotten what happened when three south side schools were merged into one in 1994? Their enrollment was 320 students. Since then, enrollment declined and in the 20046 school year 28 students were enrolled for the 8059 school year and they closed. Not all of those stu- dents stayed at St. Aloysius School. What happened to those 264-plus stu- dents? How are we evangelizing to them and their families? How can we as Christians do what we are called to do and make a difference in our community if we’re pushing people away?

Talking specifically about St. Aloysius, we, the parents and parishioners, are willing to do what it takes to keep our door open. Our enroll- ment has remained fairly steady. We haven’t grown in large numbers, not because we are not effective in our community, but because we are a small school from a small town. This is what parents who move out here to raise their families want.

Being small or having split class- es does not prevent us from provid- ing excellent academics. Just check our ISTEP scores. Also, split classes can be beneficial. This is the founda- tion of our core原因是 schools, it is a proven and beneficial method of teaching and learning.

The financial crisis in rural areas is not what we are called to do. Mission work is not profitable, but it is our calling. If we close these schools, it is just a matter of time before our small communities stop looking for Catholic education.

Jennifer Simerman
Fort Wayne

Proposed closing of St. Aloysius School is ill-advised

While contemplating change for any organization, only those objectives should be considered, the potential correction of some existing deficien- cy or the achievement of some higher good. The recommendation of the diocesan committee to merge St. Aloysius School with St. Theresa School accomplishes neither of these goals, specifically in relation to St. Aloysius.

There is no current deficiency in St. Aloysius School. Enrollment has increased in recent years, albeit slow- ly, due in part to the socio-economic status of the area. Financial obligations are being met and will be met in the future. Spiritual and academic metrics are being achieved, or exceeded, as evidenced by the con- tinued adherence to the faith by the graduates, the ISTEP scores, etc.

The experience of over 132 years of outstanding accomplishment by the school has shown that multi- grade classes are not a deterrent to student development — spiritually, academically or socially. In fact, just the opposite has been the experience. If there is nothing to be corrected, and nothing is to be gained, by implementing the recommendation, then why should the diocesan committee do it? If the merger is made, fewer stu- dents from the area will receive a Catholic education, fewer students will go on to Bishop Luers High School, and much-long lasting parish unity and cooperation. Each action would be a direct affront to those many parish families, priests, ministers and staff who have supported this great school for well over a century.

Respectfully urge the diocese to drop the consideration of this ill- founded and illogical recommenda- tion.

Connor Loesch
Fort Wayne

Today’s Catholic editorial board consists of Ann Carey, Kay Cozad, Fred and Lisa Everett, Father Mark Gurtner, Father Michael Heintz, Tim Johnson, Vince LaBarbera and Mark Weber.

TODAY’S CATHOLIC
November 23, 2008

TODAY’S CATHOLIC welcomes letters from readers. All letters must be 250 words or less, signed and include a phone number and address for verification. Today’s Catholic reserves the right to edit for clarity and length. Address letters to: Today’s Catholic • P.O. Box 11699 • Fort Wayne, IN • 46856-1169 or e-mail to: editor@f.w.dioceesefw.org

TODAY’S CATHOLIC
Keeping Christ in Christmas

A s we sit in Thanksgiving this holiday season, thank- ing God for all that we have and all that we are, it truly is the time to ponder the true mean- ing of Christmas.

There are those in our society who will be going out of their way to destroy all things that have a religious significance, especially religious symbols such as a Nativity scene. We must ask God to help change the hearts and souls of those in society looking to destroy our faith and all that fits their own agenda. We must keep Christmas and the birth of Jesus Christ, not separate. It’s not about the quantity of boxes under a Christmas tree. It’s about love and God is love.

With all the distractions of the election and the state of the econ- omy, the sobering truth is we are not in control of our destiny and many of our Catholic families are living in fear and uncertainty; families that our God will see us through. The gift of Jesus is the greatest gift mankind has ever received.

Members of the Indiana Knights of Columbus will continue to defend and express the true meaning of Christmas beginning the first Tuesday of December with the annual “Light Up For Christ” celebration. Many councils throughout our state will be light- ing up Nativity scenes and Christmas trees, caroling, collect- ing clothing and food, or doing whatever they can to keep “Christ in Christmas” — foremost in our thoughts. Charity is the first lesson of the order of the Knights of Columbus. In that spirit, Indiana Knights reach out to others in need in many ways, hopefully as a posi- tive example of Catholic love.

Indiana Knights of Columbus State Deputy Stephen Ziemba wishes all a very blessed Christmas and encourages all councils to spread the tradition of “Lighting Up For Christmas,” to keep Christ in Christmas.

Ziemba asks, “What better way to celebrate and spread the Christmas spirit than to invite another practicing Catholic gentle- man to join our order this holiday season as a gift to him and his family?” Every man who joins the ranks of the Knights of Columbus strengthens the foundation of that parish community, and if your parish doesn’t have a Knights of Columbus council, ask your parish priest to help get one started.

Bob Hartenstein is the director of communications for the Indiana Knights of Columbus.

Christ the King will never leave us

THE INDIANA KNIGHTS
BY BOB HARTENSTEIN

Christ the King
Mt 25:31-4c

This weekend closes the church’s liturgical year of 2008. Next week, a new year will begin with the First Sunday of Advent. Closing the year means that the church has led us through 12 months of careful instruction about Jesus.

The feast of Christ the King joyfully summarizes the lessons of the past year. The Lord is king! He reigns! He lives!

The first reading comes from the ancient Book of Ezekiel. In this reading, God speaks in the first person, promising protection of the flock, in other words the people of God. He is the shep- herd, seeking the lost, caring for the injured, rescuing the imper- illed. Also, God will distinguish between the sheep and others who assume other identities because of their voluntary unfaithfulness.

The Second Reading, St. Paul’s First Epistle to the Corinthians provides the second reading. This selection is a proclamation of the resurrection, and of the role of the Lord as Redeemer of humankind. He is the risen Lord, the first of those who will rise, the one who will give everlasting life. Those who will follow Jesus in being raised from the dead are “those who belong” to Christ, in other words, those persons who have admitted God, through Jesus, into their lives, and who have received from the Lord the gift of grace, eternal life and strength.

The reading frankly admits that at work in the world are forces hostile to God. These forces cannot be dismissed as insignificant. However, they are by no means omnipotent. In and through Jesus, the power and life of God will endure. God will tri- umph over all evil. No one bound to God should fear the powers of evil, although all must resist these powers.

For its final reading on this great feast, the church offers us a passage from St. Matthew’s Gospel. It looks ahead, to the day when God’s glory will over- whelm the world, to the day when Jesus will return in majesty and glory.

This expectation was a favorite theme in the early church, in the community that surrounded and prompted the for- mation of the Gospels.

The reading repeats the description given in Ezekiel. In Ezekiel, God, the shepherd, sepa- rates the sheep from the goats, the good from the unfaithful. In this reading from Matthew, Jesus promises a final judgment, that will separate the faithful from the sinful.

Beautifully in this reading, the Lord defines who will be judged as faithful, and who will be seen as unfaithful. The faithful will not be those who only give lip-ser- vice to their belief in God, but those who, in the model of Jesus, give themselves to care for the troubled and the distressed, who bring relief and hope to others.

Reflection
Sixty years ago, the parents of the current British monarch enjoyed the people’s highest esteem because of their uncom- promising commitment to the well being of the nation.

At the height of the German blitz, or bombing, of London and other major cities in the United Kingdom, the rumor spread that the royal family, as well as the government, would flee the coun- try.

One day, arriving on the scene of a horrendous bombing attack, Queen Elizabeth, the wife of King George VI, and mother Elizabeth II, was confronted with the question of whether or not she and her husband would send their young daughters to Canada. Moreover, would she and the king flee?

Elizabeth, better known later as the Queen Mother, answered, “My daughters will not leave without me. I shall not leave without the king. And, the king? The king will never, never leave you!”

If we are truly Christians, come what may, Christ the King will never, never leave us. He will bring us to glory of heaven after the wars of earth are ended.

READINGS
Sunday: Ez 34:11-12, 15-17 Ps 23:1-3, 5-6 Or 15:20-26, 28 Mt 25:21-46
Monday: Rev 14:1-3, 4b-5 Ps 24:1b-4b, 5-6 Lk 21:1-4
Tuesday: Rev 14:14-19 Ps 96:10-13 Lk 21:5-11
Wednesday: Rev 15:1-4 Ps 98:1-3b, 7-9 Lk 21:12-19
Friday: Rev 20:1-4, 11-12 Ps 94:3-6a, 8a Lk 21:29-33

CATEQUIZ’EM
By Dominic Campilison

In November, the church commemorates the Basilicas of Sts. Peter and Paul. This quiz looks the lesser known of these two.

1. Which St. Paul is associated with this basilica?
   a. St. Paul, the 13th pope after Peter
   b. St. Paul, the apostle to the gentiles
   c. St. Paul Scotia, first martyr in Scotland

2. Why was the site chosen for this basilica?
   a. It was cheap and there was a really slump
   b. We do not know.
   c. The site was associated traditionally with the death of Paul.

3. Tradition holds that Paul was beheaded. Why was not crucified like Jesus and Peter?
   a. He was not tall enough to be able to fit on a standard cross.
   b. He was a rabbi so was exempt from pagan executions.
   c. He was a Roman citizen and so exempt from crucifixion.

4. This basilica is sometimes known as “without the walls” — why?
   a. The faithful kept chasing cousin souvenirs so the walls vanished.
   b. Due to the excellent climate colonnade, not walls, were used.
   c. It was outside the walls of Rome.

5. Who ordered the site examined?
   a. Constantine
   b. Pope Sixtus V
   c. Gregory the Great

6. Who consecrated the basilica that was built there?
   a. Constantine
   b. Pope Sylvester
   c. Pope Tweedy

7. When was this?
   a. the second century
   b. the third century
   c. the fourth century

8. The basilica was added by later churchmen, often for prestige, but these practical items were added in the 9th century:
   a. swimming pools
   b. defensive walls
   c. dungeons

9. Why were these necessary?
   a. Italy more and more was prone to wars and invasions.
   b. The monks had complained about the lack of recreation facilities.
   c. The church had to lock men up to force them to become priests.

10. As with most buildings added to over a long period of time, the architecture reflects different styles. The basilica has all but this in its décor:
   a. Gothic references
   b. Byzantine style
   c. Eire Nua “Ogham” calligraphy

11. Attention was gradually diverted from St. Paul’s Basilica by the building of this:
   b. the tomb of St. Peter
   c. Eire Nua “Ogham” calligraphy

12. After the basilica was destroyed in a fire it was
   a. rebuilt to match the newer basilicas.
   b. rebuilt to duplicate what had been there, as much as possible.
   c. left as a ruin and a testimony to the futility of Italian nationalism.

13. At the site today there is an active
   a. Benedictine monastery
   b. Muslim community
   c. volcano, the only one in central Italy

14. Archaeologists working at the site in recent times believe they discovered this:
   a. the oldest Neanderthal Christian
   b. the tomb of St. Paul
   c. the Holy Grail

15. Today the site is:
   a. a shrine, testimonials to the more powerful draw of St. Peter’s
   b. a secularly administered building run by the “sons of the Wolf”
   c. an active church and popular pilgrimage/tourist center

   ANSWER:
   1b, 2c, 3c, 4c, 5a, 6b, 7c, 8b, 9a, 10c, 11a, 12b, 13a, 14b, 15c

COMMENTS
November 23, 2008

ANSWER:

1b, 2c, 3c, 4c, 5a, 6b, 7c, 8b, 9a, 10c, 11a, 12b, 13a, 14b, 15c
What is the posture for the Our Father in Mass?

A lot of people hold hands during the Our Father, some assume a similar posture as the priest, and some fold their hands. Is there a norm on this? Anonymous

This is a common liturgical question, especially since practices and opinions on this matter vary dramatically. Actually, there is no norm as to what posture the layperson should adopt during the Lord’s Prayer at Mass. The “General Instruction of the Roman Missal” (the official instruction manual for the Mass) is silent on this particular issue. As such, besides the commonly accepted prayer gesture of folded hands, there may be some local regulations and variety — but only insofar as the practice does not contradict local regulations or disrupt the prayerfulness of the Mass.

The posture of outstretched arms is called the “orans” position, and was associated with prayer and adoration in the early church. During the development of the Roman Catholic liturgy, this posture became closely associated with the intercessory role of the priest on behalf of the people.

The recent appearance of uplifted hands among the congregation probably originated in charismatic communities, but has since gained widespread use. If it is done, individuals should be careful not to obscure the unique role of the ordained minister. It may be helpful to consider that even in consecrated Masses, only the principal celebrant (not all the priests) maintains the “orans” posture while “Deliver us from evil” is prayed.

The practice of holding hands is also very widespread. It is a devotional practice that can be very beautiful, and many families do so as a means of expressing the communal praying prayer. It might make sense if couples, families, or close-knit groups wish to hold hands during the Lord’s Prayer at Mass; but those who do this must guard against three things.

First, this posture should not be mandated or broadly encouraged for the entire congregation. Holding hands can be harmless if conducted with dignity and if nobody is pressured into it. Those who hold hands must recognize and respect that many are uncomfortable with such an intimate posture, which often requires a strong sense of personal familiarity.

A natural aversion is also particularly strong during cold and flu season. In addition, mandating this posture would be an inappropriate injection of piety into the liturgy.

Second, this practice should never detract from filial adoration of God, which is a focal point of the Our Father and of the entire Mass. The end of the Catechesis of the Catholic Church is devoted to the Lord’s Prayer, and No. 2781 says this: “When we pray to the Father, we are in communion with him and with his Son, Jesus Christ. Then we know and recognize him with an ever new sense of wonder. The first phrase of the Our Father is a blessing of adoration before it is a supplication. For it is the glory of God that we should recognize him as ‘Father’, the true God.”

Third, it would be misguided to hold hands during the Our Father if it is meant to promote a sense of unity or community that is alleged lacking in the liturgy. Not only can this easily become superficial or devolve into a worldly understanding of solidarity, but the principle source of unity should always be the liturgy itself — especially the Eucharist and the reception of Holy Communion.

We are preparing to enter into real communion with God while asking him to “keep us free from sin.” So, if we may more perfectly live our adoption as his sons and daughters in the bond that is the body of Christ, our goal is elevating into the community of saints.

Similar concerns apply to the orderly carrying out of the sign of peace afterwards — the ritual action should express that this is the peace of Christ and not a haphazard social greeting. Also, dramatic efforts to stretch arms across aisles are really not in keeping with the decorum of the sacred liturgy, or with the focus of the Lord’s Prayer.

So, although many practices are not explicitly forbidden, any extra actions or postures during the Lord’s Prayer must ultimately be evaluated according to whether they keep intact the integrity and reverence that are so fundamental to the Mass.

The two Americas

By the dawn’s early light on Nov. 2, distinct Americas hove into view. The two Americas are not defined by conventional economics, ethnic or religious categories; it’s not just a matter of border crossings. America . . . black America versus white America, or Catholic America versus Protestant America. No, what this year’s election cycle clarified decisively is that the great public fissure in these United States is between the culture of life and the culture of death.

In 1995, when Pope John Paul II introduced the phrase “culture of death” in the encyclical “Evangelium Vitae” (“The Gospel of Life”), more than a decade after “The Culture of Death,” America now 50 years into the abortion battle can be described by some bishops as immoral; it is certainly stupid, and it must be challenged by educated adults. That includes elected officials like the pulpit to unsettle settled patterns of mindlessness. This year, I’m grateful for all the bishops who began to accept the responsibilities of their teaching office; so, now, must parish pastors.

We need more persuasive ideas and language in the fight against euthanasia. Yes, the good guys were outspaced in Washington State by orders of magnitude — and that should cause serious expressions of conscience among Catholic philosophers and individuals of means. But, as in the debate over embryonic stem-cell research, the culture of life has yet to develop a language that can defeat the invocation of “compassion” when that’s misunderstood by the culture of death.

As we need prayer — lots of it. Some demons require special powers to exorcize. As of Nov. 5, it is clear that certain of them have taken up residence in the United States of America.

Blessed are those who entered the Mass with the intercessory role of the priest on behalf of the people.

The people of California have exercised their sovereign will to prevent the parents of minors from being notified if their daughters intends to have an abortion — although you may be quite certain that said parents would be consulted before said minor’s school nurse administers an aspirin tablet.

The people of Michigan have decided to authorize a wholesale slaughter of human embryos for medical purposes — at precisely the moment that embryonic stem-cell research has lost much of its scientific lustre, thanks to developments in the reprogramming of adult stem cells.

Culture of death, indeed.

We need more persuasive ideas and language in the fight against euthanasia. Yes, the good guys were outspaced in Washington State by orders of magnitude — and that should cause serious expressions of conscience among Catholic philosophers and individuals of means. But, as in the debate over embryonic stem-cell research, the culture of life has yet to develop a language that can defeat the invocation of “compassion” when that’s misunderstood by the culture of death.

As we need prayer — lots of it. Some demons require special powers to exorcize. As of Nov. 5, it is clear that certain of them have taken up residence in the United States of America.

By Patricia Kasten

The two Americas

The people of the State of Washington may have voted in a landslide, an act permitting the euthanizing of the sick, elderly and burdensome under the “Death with dignity” and “physician-assisted suicide.”

TheClientRect the Ethics and Public Policy Center in Washington, D.C.

SCRUPTURE SEARCH

By Patrick Kasten

Gospel for November 23, 2008

Matthew 25:31-46

What is the posture for the Our Father in Mass?

The two Americas

The people of the United States have elected the most radically pro-abortion presidential candidate in American history, and by the largest popular vote percentage garnered by a Democrat since Lyndon B. Johnson.

The people of the State of Washington may have voted in a landslide, an act permitting the euthanizing of the sick, elderly and burdensome under the “Death with dignity” and “physician-assisted suicide.”

TheClientRect the Ethics and Public Policy Center in Washington, D.C.

AT THE RETURN

Advertise in TODAY’S CATHOLIC

Call 260.456.2824
New Haven team takes CYO-ICCL runner-up diocesan playoff game title

BY JOE KOZINSKI

MISHAWAKA — The chilling winds of winter howled and voiced their fury Nov. 9 as three important football games were to be played, the diocesan playoffs of the Inter-City Catholic League-Catholic Youth Organization (ICCL/CYO) Championship pitted the runner-up game and the ICCL B-team final. The ICCL/CYO diocesan championship game, which saw Mishawaka Catholic beat Sts. JATS (Sts. Joseph-Elizabeth Ann Seton, St. Aloysius, St. Therese), 32-0, was the only one-sided contest of the day and was covered.

The ICCL B-Team championship pitted the runner-up game and the ICCL runner-up champion, Seton, St. Aloysius, St. Therese, against the ICCL runner-up champion set for the diocesan championship against South Bend's ICCL runner-up champion, New Haven, Raiders.

The battle lines were drawn, the St. Anthony/St. Joseph Panthers welcomed the St. John the Baptist, New Haven, Raiders.

The seesaw battle started with a 1-yard run by Mike Favorite of New Haven, Raiders.

With less than two minutes remaining in the ball game, Karczewski connected with a 43-yard jolt by Oliver Page and a five-time defending champion Holy Cross/Christ the King Crusaders.

The Holy Cross/Christ the King team would come down without a fight, Peter Rymsza scoring a touchdown to close the gap and keep the hopes of the Crusader faithful alive.

All doubt was extinguished as Page again burst for an 18-yard jaunt to cap the scoring and the championship for the Panthers, final score 19-6.

New Haven's St. John the Baptist CYO football team won the runner-up diocesan championship against South Bend's ICCL runner-up champion, St. Anthony/St. Joseph. The New Haven team is shown, top, and winning the trophy.

Just moments later, the hearts of the Panthers were crushed as McCarthy lined up and booted a perfect game to end the season.

The girls and the coaches work year-round on their routines.

Emenhiser earns volleyball scholarship

BY MICHELLE CASTLEMAN

MONROEVILLE — Haley Emenhiser began her volleyball career as a third grader in the Catholic Youth Organization (CYO) league at St. Louis, Academy. As a high school senior, Emenhiser’s big vertical leap and commanding jump serve have earned her a full ride college scholarship to Indiana University-Purdue University at Fort Wayne (IPFW).

Throughout her years as a St. Louis-St. Rose Twin, Emenhiser was given a strong foundation from dedicated coaches.

“I’ll always remember our presea-son practices at the park and getting ice cream at the Whippy Dip at the end of the year,” recalls Emenhiser.

Emenhiser capped off her high school career leading her Woodlan High School Lady Warriors in kills and aces this fall and was named to the all-Allen County Athletic Conference team as well as the Academic All-Conference squad. Ranked in the top 10 percent of her class, the senior standout also participated in track and basketball at Woodlan High School and the Fort Wayne Volleyball Club circuit for the past two years.

Emenhiser has had a lifetime goal of playing volleyball at the college level. She is excited to start with a new team at IPFW and travel around the country playing the game she loves. The 5-foot, 10-inch Emenhiser plans to major in elementary education.

Wearing No.1 on the court, Emenhiser is eighth in her family of 10. The daughter of Greg and Sandy Emenhiser, rural Monroeville, Haley has eight brothers and one sister and has been a lifelong member of St. Louis-Besancon Parish, in rural New Haven, where she participates in St. John the Baptist’s KLS Youth Group.

Christmas Sale Nov.24 - 29, 2008 30% off Religious Christmas Cards 20% off Select Nativity Sets and Religious Ornaments Advent Items: Candles, Wreaths, Calendars, Books, Music, Gifts Also, Unique Crucifixes, Rosaries, Jewelry, Books & Videos Divine Mercy Gifts 320 Dixie Way North, South Bend (one block south of Cleveland Road on IN 933) (574) 277-1400 is imported from Italy exclusively by Roman, Inc.
BY BETH GRIFFIN

NEW YORK (CNS) — Three tenors, who also happen to be diocesan priests from Northern Ireland, have been signed to a recording contract with the RCA Victor label of Sony BMG for $1 million (US $1.27 million). They are the Priests and their debut album, titled “The Priests,” is scheduled to go on sale Nov. 18.

“The Priests” sing sacred music, including “Pange Lingua” and “Ave Maria.” Their album was recorded, in part, at St. Peter’s Basilica in Rome, during a break from their pastoral duties. Each priest is associated with a parish in the Diocese of Down and Connor.

Their arrangement with Sony BMG acknowledges the priority of their priestly duties. Their share of the proceeds will be used for their parishes and to support retired priests.

Father Eugene O’Hagan, his brother Father Martin O’Hagan and Father David Delargy spoke to Catholic News Service in New York Oct. 21 at the end of a promotional tour for their album. The three began singing together in high school, where their schoolmates called them “Holy Holy Holy” because of their shared goal to enter the priesthood.

They continued singing together while they studied at the diocesan seminary, St. Malachy’s College in Belfast, and took voice lessons from renowned teacher Frank Capper. When the trio attended the Irish College in Rome, Father Eugene O’Hagan continued voice lessons and the three priests sang on many occasions, including a Mass celebrated by the late Pope John Paul II.

“The priests, all in their 40s, said they were inspired by Pope John Paul II to ‘put out into the deep’ where, leaving the security of the familiar shoreline, we may have the chance of helping those at risk being caught up in them ourselves. This is a challenge made to every follower of Christ in every era and no less urgent in today’s modern world.”

Father Eugene O’Hagan said Bishop Noel Treanor of Down and Connor “is delighted that he has three priests putting the diocese on the map.” He said Bishop Treanor’s predecessor, Bishop Patrick Walsh, “was happy to encourage us. He knew we’d been singing since our seminary years.”

While in New York the Priests sang at a private Sony BMG reception held in their honor at Providence, a New York nightclub, which was the Manhattan Baptist Church from the 1920s to the 1960s. Its cathedral ceiling, arched windows and exposed beams are still intact.

The acoustics in the place are so good it was the home of Media Sound Studios in the 1970s and 1980s, hosting recording sessions for Jimi Hendrix, Billy Joel, John Lennon, the Rolling Stones, James Taylor and other legendary rock performers.

“The Priests,” wearing clerical garb and standing with their hands at their sides, sang five songs from a small unadorned platform. The cover art for their album, a Celtic cross on a white background, was projected on the windows on either side of the stage. They were accompanied by pianist Danny O’Neill.

Their performance was introduced by Nick Raphael, managing director of Sony’s Epic Records. “Produced by Nick Raphael, managing director of Sony’s Epic Records. This is not a religious project. It’s a project of passion,” he said. “These guys are passionate about what they do.”

Richard Palmese, executive vice president for promotion for RCA Music Group, said that as an executive he is “excited about the great music and the vocal talents of our three artists.”

“The offer to sign our artists to RCA is such a strong expression of their talent and potential,” said Palmese. “These are hit songs, spiritual classics we’ve grown up with, songs that we cherish. It’s a very worthy product commercially and spiritually. We need evangelism in these times.”

He acknowledged the Priests is not a typical group for RCA and joked that it may be their members the first artists in his more than 30 years in the business that he can promote without going to confession.

Father Delargy said the three priests were grateful for the encouragement of their confreres, whom he described as “a very strong fraternity of priests. They are delighted for us and very supportive.”

Father Eugene O’Hagan added that their 93-year-old father was “over-the-moon” happy for them and could not continue singing because his recently deceased mother “is having words with God” to assure their success.

Father Eugene O’Hagan said Bishop Noel Treanor of Down and Connor “is delighted that he has three priests putting the diocese on the map.” He said Bishop Treanor’s predecessor, Bishop Patrick Walsh, “was happy to encourage us. He knew we’d been singing since our seminary years.”

While in New York the Priests sang at a private Sony BMG reception held in their honor at Providence, a New York nightclub, which was the Manhattan Baptist Church from the 1920s to the 1960s. Its cathedral ceiling, arched windows and exposed beams are still intact.

The acoustics in the place are so good it was the home of Media Sound Studios in the 1970s and 1980s, hosting recording sessions for Jimi Hendrix, Billy Joel, John Lennon, the Rolling Stones, James Taylor and other legendary rock performers.

“The Priests,” wearing clerical garb and standing with their hands at their sides, sang five songs from a small unadorned platform. The cover art for their album, a Celtic cross on a white background, was projected on the windows on either side of the stage. They were accompanied by pianist Danny O’Neill.

Their performance was introduced by Nick Raphael, managing director of Sony’s Epic Records. “Produced by Nick Raphael, managing director of Sony’s Epic Records. This is not a religious project. It’s a project of passion,” he said. “These guys are passionate about what they do.”

Richard Palmese, executive vice president for promotion for RCA Music Group, said that as an executive he is “excited about the great music and the vocal talents of our three artists.”

“The offer to sign our artists to RCA is such a strong expression of their talent and potential,” said Palmese. “These are hit songs, spiritual classics we’ve grown up with, songs that we cherish. It’s a very worthy product commercially and spiritually. We need evangelism in these times.”

He acknowledged the Priests is not a typical group for RCA and joked that it may be their members the first artists in his more than 30 years in the business that he can promote without going to confession.

Father Delargy said the three priests were grateful for the encouragement of their confreres, whom he described as “a very strong fraternity of priests. They are delighted for us and very supportive.”

Father Eugene O’Hagan added that their 93-year-old father was “over-the-moon” happy for them and could not continue singing because his recently deceased mother “is having words with God” to assure their success.

Free trial courses offered by Ancilla College

DONALDSON — Ancilla College announced plans to continue the We Believe in You program for spring 2009. Designed for prospective students 21-years and older who have never attended college, We Believe in You allows a student to never attended college, We Believe in You allows a student to earn college credits at Ancilla,” with more people participating and demonstrate their pursuit to an associate degree.

All classes will be offered on campus as there is a greater variety of options for students to take. Alonzo also stressed that students will be able to have their college transcripts once they have finished the course.

For more information on We Believe in You, students can contact the Ancilla College Admissions Office at (574) 936-8898.
WHAT’S HAPPENING?

WHAT’S HAPPENING carries announcements about upcoming events in the diocese. Send in your announcement at least two weeks prior to the event. Mail to: Today’s Catholic, P.O. Box 11169, Fort Wayne 46856; or e-mail: fhogan@fsdiocesefwbs.org. Events that require an admission charge or payment to participate will receive one free listing. For additional listings of that event, please call our advertising sales staff at (260) 456-2824 to purchase space.

MISC. HAPPENINGS

Ham and turkey dinner
New Haven — St. Louis Academy HASA will have a home party expo Saturday, Nov. 29, from 3-6 p.m. and Sunday Nov. 30, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the parish hall. Vendors include Longaberger, Gold Canyon, Pampered Chef, Premier Designs, designer purses, Beauty Control, Mary Kay, Creative Memories, Home Interiors, Tupperware and more.

Holiday home party expo
New Haven — St. Louis Academy HASA will have a home party expo Saturday, Nov. 29, from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. A complete holiday meal will be served along with raffles, silent auction and country craft store. Cost is $7 for adults, $5 for ages 5-13 and under free.

Fort Wayne — An Advent Vespers Service will be held at St. Aloysius Parish at 6:30 p.m. in the annex of the school Saturday, Nov. 29, from 3-6 p.m. and Sunday, Dec. 14, from 9 a.m. to noon. A free-will offering will be taken to support the Woman’s Care Center. Bake sale begins at 9 a.m. and will benefit the food pantry.

St. Nicholas Day party
South Bend — A St. Nicholas Day (Mikola) party will be Friday, Dec. 5, at St. Casimir Parish at 6:30 p.m. in the annex at the corner of Dunham and Webster streets. A traditional Polish meal will be served, including homemade pierogi, noodles, beef and coffee cake. Polish and English Christmas carols will be sung and there will be a visit from St. Nicholas. Tickets can be purchased at the parish office by calling (574) 287-9551. The cost is $6 for adults and $3 for children, ages 5-12.

St. Augustine offers greenery
South Bend — St. Augustine Parish will have a greenery sale Saturday, Dec. 6, from 9-10 a.m. Other wreaths, $17; swags, $13; Advent centerpieces, $26 or garland, $16, by Nov. 30. To Mary Filbert at (574) 234-7992.

FUNDRAISERS

Pancake breakfast helps support Women’s Care Center
Fort Wayne — The St. Joseph Hessen Cassel Knights of Columbus on U.S. 27 S., are having a pancake, egg and whole hog sausage breakfast and bake sale Sunday, Dec. 14, from 8 a.m. to noon. A free-will offering will take to support the Woman’s Care Center. Bake sale begins at 9 a.m. and will benefit the food pantry.

Knights plan spaghetti dinner
South Bend — The Knights of Columbus Council 5521, 61533 S. Ironwood Dr., will have a spaghetti dinner on Friday, Nov. 21, from 5 to 7 p.m. Adults $7, children (5-12) $3. Carry-out available.

Turkey bingo
Fort Wayne — St. Joseph-St. Elizabeth HASA will have Turkey bingo Sunday, Nov. 23, at St. Elizabeth’s school cafeteria from 1-3 p.m. Food, family and fun includes bingo prizes of Scrip certificates, cash and frozen turkeys.

Cookie walk announced
Fort Wayne — The Christ Child Society will have a cookie walk Saturday, Nov. 22, from 8:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at the St. Elizabeth Ann Seton parish hall.

———

ADVENT...A Time To Prepare

WREATHS • CALENDARS • CANDLES
Fontanini Nativity Sets

A beautiful selection of Christmas items
Divine Mercy Gifts

320 DIXIE WAY NORTH
South Bend
1/2 mile north of Notre Dame on State Road 933
(574) 277-1400
Oplatek is in!

PROVENA
Sacred Heart Home
Our experienced and professional staff is dedicated to providing the highest quality of nursing care.

• Daily Mass
• Medicare Certified
• Secured Neighborhoods for Alzheimer Care
• Physical, Occupational, & Speech Therapies
• One and Two Bedroom Assisted Living Apartments
• Independent Living Patio Homes

For Information, Call: (260) 497-2841
515 N. Main Street, Avilla, Indiana 46710
Provena Health, a Catholic health system, build communities of healing and hope by compassionately responding to human need in the name of Jesus Christ.

Visit us at www.provena.org/sacredheart

———

Wygant Floral co. INC.
327 Lincolnway West  South Bend
232-3354  (800) 994-2687
Charge by Phone or Come in and Browse
Monday-Friday: 8AM - 5:30PM
Saturday 8AM - 5PM

FLOWERS & GIFTS FOR ALL OCCASIONS
Fresh Cut Flowers • Silk and Dried Flowers • Imported and Domestic Gifts and Candies • Plants • Gourmet Fruit Baskets • Balloons

AREA WIDE DELIVERY
wygantfloral.com

———

REST IN PEACE

Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception
Mishawaka
Lillian C. Solfonik, 96, Queen of Peace
Maxine S. Weber, 87, Queen of Peace
Richard R. Martens, 85, St. Monica
Alice E. Pritts, 96, St. Joseph
Sister M. Grace Clemens, OSF, 77, St. Francis Convent
New Haven
Harold A. Oberley, 88, St. Louis-Besanson
South Bend
Benjamin S. Gasky, 84, St. Casimir
Evelyn B. Kovatch, 87, Our Lady of Hungary

Columbia City
Catherine Getchell, 83, St. Paul of the Cross
Elkhart
Jeanne R. Longbrake, 66, St. Thomas the Apostle
Dorothy L. Bedell, 86, St. Thomas the Apostle
Fort Wayne
Mary Ellen Forge, 70, Most Precious Blood
Delores I. Zink, 89, Our Lady of Good Hope
Robert J. Hersler, Sr., 83, St. Charles Borromeo
Jack Richardson, 83, St. Mary
Donald J. Craighead, Sr., 94, St. Jude
Edward A. LaRocque, 83, St. Charles Borromeo

Catherine T. Hesley, 84, Catholic of the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception
Cheryl A. Rucano, 56, Corpus Christi
Richard Trzaskowski, 68, Holy Family
Agnes M. Zieger, 98, St. Anthony de Padua
Janet M. Hojara, 77, Holy Cross
Maxine Schereman, 90, Corpus Christi
Karen A. Sjoman, 59, Christ the King
John L. Borich, 66, Holy Family
Mary E. Denslow, 92, St. Matthew Cathedral
Yoder
Samuel C. Dampnan, 73, St. Aloysius,
Bishops approve blessing service for children in the womb

BY NANCY FRAZIER O'BRIEN

BALTIMORE (CNS) — To fill a gap in existing prayer books, the U.S. bishops Nov. 11 overwhelmingly approved a liturgical service in English and Spanish for blessing children in the womb.

Archbishop Joseph E. Kurtz of Louisville, Ky., praised the new blessing as “a tangible way to witness pastorally and sacramentally to the life of the unborn child” and said it could also serve as an opportunity for parishes to bring together expectant couples for mutual support.

Bishop Michael D. Pfeifer of San Angelo, Texas, said the document could present “a great catechetical moment for all of us.”

He said he hoped it might lead the bishops to declare an annual day of prayer for the unborn in the future.

The document required the approval of two-thirds of the Latin rite members of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops and must be sent to the Vatican Congregation for Divine Worship and the Sacraments for “recognitio,” or confirmation. The English-language version was approved 223-1 and the Spanish-language version 224-0.

Bishop Arthur J. Serratelli of Paterson, N.J., chairman of the bishops’ Committee on Divine Worship, introduced the document Nov. 11, the first day of the USCCB fall general assembly in Baltimore.

He said the blessing, which had been approved both by his committee and by the Committee on Pro-Life Activities, “was prepared to support the parents awaiting the birth of their child, to encourage in the parish prayers for and recognition of the precious gift of the child in the womb, and to foster respect for human life within society.”

The blessing can be used in the context of a Mass or outside a Mass, and for an individual mother, a couple or a group of expectant parents.

Bishop Serratelli said the pro-life committee had received requests from “a number of dioceses” for such a document.

The blessing includes intercessions “for our government and civic leaders that they may perform their duties with justice and compassion while respecting the gift of human life” and “for a safe and healthy pregnancy for all expectant mothers and for a safe delivery for their children.”

It also expresses concern “for children who are unwanted, unloved, abandoned or abused, that the Lord will inspire his people to protect and care for them.”

If used as a blessing outside Mass, the service includes introductory prayers, Scripture readings, intercessions, the actual blessing of the mother and child, and a concluding rite.

“May Almighty God, who has created new life, now bless the child in your womb,” the blessing says. “The Lord has brought you the joy of motherhood. May he bless you with a safe and healthy pregnancy. You thank the Lord today for the gift of your child: May he bring you and your child one day to share in the unending joys of heaven.”

There are also optional prayers for fathers, for families and for the parish community.

Once approved by the Vatican, the blessing will be included in future editions of the Book of Blessings when that liturgical text is revised.

But Bishop Earl A. Boyea of Lansing, Mich., asked that consideration be given to putting the blessing also in the book “Catholic Household Blessings & Prayers” so that it could be used in other than church services.

“It could be useful to those marching outside abortion clinics, to bless the mothers and children inside,” he said.

Breast cancer patient is ‘brewing for a cure’

BY LAUREN CAGGIANO

FORT WAYNE — It’s all a matter of perspective for Kim Richards.

Richards, an active mother of two and co-owner of the Higher Grounds coffee shops in the Fort Wayne area, was diagnosed in July with an aggressive form of breast cancer.

But what she does have control over, she said, is making people more aware of the disease.

Currently Richards is undergoing chemotherapy and remaining positive about her prognosis.

In the meantime, she has set up an online journal to further raise awareness and share her journey: www.car-ingbridge.org/visit/knrichards. This is a medium for friends and family to share their love and support during the long road ahead.

Support Kim by purchasing and wearing a “Brewing for a Cure” T-shirt available at Higher Grounds shops at St. Joe Village, Dupont and Midtowne Village locations. A portion of the proceeds will be donated to the Triple Negative Cancer Research Foundation. To check out all the Higher Grounds locations and order a “Brewing for a Cure” T-shirt, go to www.highergroundonline.com.

He said the blessing, which had been approved both by his committee and by the Committee on Pro-Life Activities, “was prepared to support the parents awaiting the birth of their child, to encourage in the parish prayers for and recognition of the precious gift of the child in the womb, and to foster respect for human life within society.”

He said the blessing, which had been approved both by his committee and by the Committee on Pro-Life Activities, “was prepared to support the parents awaiting the birth of their child, to encourage in the parish prayers for and recognition of the precious gift of the child in the womb, and to foster respect for human life within society.”

He said the blessing, which had been approved both by his committee and by the Committee on Pro-Life Activities, “was prepared to support the parents awaiting the birth of their child, to encourage in the parish prayers for and recognition of the precious gift of the child in the womb, and to foster respect for human life within society.”