VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI created 24 new cardinals, including two from the United States, and called them to be strong in spreading and defending the faith and promoting peace and tranquility within the Church.

Cardinal Donald W. Wuerl of Washington and Cardinal Raymond L. Burke, prefect of the Vatican’s supreme court, joined other new cardinals from 13 countries Nov. 20 in formally professing their Catholic faith and fidelity to the pope.

After the oath, all but one of the new cardinals knelt before the pope to receive a red biretta, a three-cornered red hat, which the pope said, “signifies that you must be ready to act with strength, to the point of shedding blood, to increase the Christian faith, for the peace and tranquility of the people of God and for the freedom and growth of the holy Roman Church.”

Cardinal Antonios Naguib, the Catholic Coptic patriarch of Alexandria, Egypt, received a new patriarch’s hat with a thin red trim added to the traditional black veil.

Pope Benedict concelebrated Mass Nov. 21 with the new cardinals and gave each of them a cardinal’s ring, telling them it was a sign “of your nuptial pact with the Church.”

Bishops elect new leadership, pass agreement on baptism

BALTIMORE (CNS) — The 2010 fall general assembly of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops was devoted primarily to internal matters — the election of new conference leaders, discussion of how their own statements should be produced, budgetary and structural questions and information about how they can better integrate new media into diocesan structures.

They also affirmed an historic agreement to recognize baptisms in four Protestant church communities.

Public sessions made up the first two days of the Nov. 15-18 assembly, with the bishops spending the remainder of the meeting in executive session.

The last public action the bishops took was a nearly unanimous vote Nov. 16 to approve the preparation of a brief policy statement on assisted suicide, which they will debate and vote on at their spring assembly in June.

Before the afternoon vote Cardinal Daniel N. DiNardo of Galveston-Houston, chairman of the bishops’ Committee on Pro-Life Activities, outlined the “increasingly urgent threat” posed by the wider use of assisted suicide in the United States.

The one surprise of the meeting came Nov. 16 when the bishops voted for new leaders of their conference. Breaking with precedent, the sitting vice president, Bishop Gerald F. Kicanas of Tucson, Ariz., was not elected to succeed Chicago Cardinal Francis E. George, who was completing his three-year term as president.

Bishop Kicanas lost to New York Archbishop Timothy M. Dolan 128-111 in the third-ballot voting.

It marked the first time since the bishops’ conference was reorganized in 1966 following the Second Vatican Council that a sitting vice president who sought the presidency did not win election. In two elections, in 1974 and 1977, circumstances dictated that the vice president did not rise to lead the conference.

“I’m surprised, I’m honored, I’m flattered and a tad intimidated,” Archbishop Dolan told Catholic News Service shortly after being elected.

In a statement, Bishop Kicanas said he respected the wisdom of his “brother bishops in choosing their new president and vice president. I greatly appreciated their expressions of personal support and wishes for a successful presidential term.”

He said that being vice president was “a marvelous experience” and he now looked forward to focusing on the needs of his own diocese.

During the executive session Nov. 17, Cardinal George narrated Bishop Kicanas’ chairman of the board of Catholic Relief Services, the U.S. bishops’ overseas relief and development agency. Archbishop Dolan held the post but had to vacate it upon his election as president.

In other voting Nov. 16, the bishops also approved changes for the first time in more than a decade, to the bishops’ Code of Conduct, a revised policy on the issuance of USCCB guidelines and the USCCB’s cycle for one year to provide time for evaluation of the 2007 conference reorganization study.

The agreement, signed by President Barack Obama would permit federal funding of abortion, inadequately protect the conscience rights of healthcare providers and leave out immigrants. Other Catholic groups, including the Catholic Health Association and many orders of women religious, said the bill and an executive order signed by President Barack Obama would exclude any possibility of federal money going to pay for abortions under the health plan.

The cardinal addressed several other issues in his outgoing speech, among them concern for Christians in the Middle East. He said Christians were “uniquely … without protection in the wake of the American invasion of Iraq.”

“As bishops, as Americans, we cannot turn from this scene or allow the world to overlook it,” Cardinal George said. The bishops also affirmed the Nov. 9 letter he sent to President Barack Obama, urging the U.S. government to “redouble its efforts to assist Iraqis” in providing safety for its citizens, especially religious minorities.

The bishops heard reports on the record donations by U.S. Catholics for reconstruction in Haiti; preparations for World Youth Day in Spain in August 2011; the need for the bishops to embrace social media to effectively evangelize the “digital continent”; and the work of the bishops’ Ad Hoc Committee for the Defense of Marriage to promote traditional marriage in the face of legislative efforts to legalize same-sex marriage. The committee also was upgraded to be a subcommittee of the bishops’ Committee on Laity, Marriage, Family Life and Youth.

Dolan: ‘I’m surprised, I’m honored, I’m flattened ... a tad intimidated’

Baltimore (CNS) — New York Archbishop Timothy M. Dolan let out a chuckle during a press conference at the annual fall meeting of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops Nov. 16. Archbishop Dolan was elected conference president and Archbishop Kurtz was elected vice president during the meeting.

“I love Bishop Kicanas and I pray he was going to be president,” the archbishop said. “I do think the bishops take these elections so seriously there’s a sort of bristling that anybody would be thought of as a shoosh-in.”

“I think a lot of bishops said maybe it’s time that the vice president doesn’t automatically become the president,” he continued. “That is a surprise. You can see Bishop Kicanas got a great vote. He enjoys high esteem.”

He added that the vote was hardly a landslide, and that he doesn’t think it was a personal reflection on Bishop Kicanas.

At a news conference following the bishops’ morning session, he pointed out that he and Bishop Kicanas had been the final candidates for vice president three years earlier. The Tucson bishop won that vote of 128-106.

Archbishop Dolan, 60, said he’s a bit daunted to be succeeding Cardinal Francis E. George as president in the CNS interview. He called Cardinal George “an amazing cocktail of wit, perceptive intelligence and pastoral savviness.”

Archbishop Dolan also admitted, “I’m not all that good at meetings,” so the prospect of being in charge of the flow of a meeting is a little intimidating.

“Even my brother bishops tease me, because they watch me at these meetings and they know my patience level isn’t all that high, that I’m one of the ones that often goes for coffee in the middle of a session. I’m not going to be able to do that anymore,” he joked. “I’m stuck up at the bench.”

Archbishop Dolan said he regret having to give up his chairmanship of Catholic Relief Services, which he said he’s found exhilarating for the sense it has given him of the universal Church. Archbishop Dolan has been head of the New York Archdiocese since his installation in April 2009. He said he’s “loved every day of it,” and acknowledged there’s been a steep learning curve in becoming head of one of the largest U.S. archdioceses but sees it as good preparation for becoming the national representative of his fellow bishops.

He likened his surprise over his election to his appointment to New York in February 2009. He had been archbishop of Milwaukee since 2002.

“I didn’t ask to be archbishop of New York, and when I got the word the Holy Father wanted me to be, I asked if I could indicate why I shouldn’t be that person,” he said. “And the nuncio said, ‘That wasn’t what I asked you. I didn’t ask if you should, I asked if you would, because the Holy Father wants you.’ So there’s an immense trust in God’s grace and mercy, and that’s unfailing.”

He remembered telling his mother at the time that he didn’t know if he had the right attributes for the New York post. Her response was, “Relax, obviously the people in charge think you do.” “I guess my brother bishops feel the same way,” he added.

Pope’s new book addresses sex abuse, condoms, possible resignation

BY JOHN THAVIS

ROME (CNS) — Pope Benedict XVI’s book-length interview is certain to spark global attention, and not only for its comments suggesting that condom use might be acceptable in some circumstances.

In the 219-page book, “Light of the World: The Pope, the Church and the Signs of the Times,” the German pontiff spoke candidly on the clerical sex abuse scandal, relations with Islam, papal resignation and other “threatening catastrophe” facing humanity.

The wide-ranging interview was conducted by German writer Peter Seewald, who posed questions in six one-hour sessions last summer. The book was to be released Nov. 23 at the Vatican, but ample excerpts were published three days earlier by the Vatican newspaper.

The book reveals a less formal side of the pope, as he responds simply and directly on topics as diverse as the joy of sex and the ban on burqa. Much of the conversation focuses on the pope’s call for a global “examination of conscience” in the face of economic uncertainty, environmental disasters and moral slippage.

The pope repeatedly emphasized that the Church’s role in a globalized world is to not impose a “burden” of moral rules but to open the doors to God. Even before the book’s release, media attention centered on the pope’s remarks on condoms in AIDS prevention. While repeating his view that condoms cannot be the only answer to the AIDS epidemic, the pope allowed that in some specific cases — for example, that of male prostitutes — use of a condom could be a step toward taking moral responsibility for one’s actions.

An entire chapter and parts of others were dedicated to the clerical sex abuse scandal. The pope called it “a great crisis” that left him “stunned by how wretched the Church is, by how much her members fail to follow Christ.”

“It was really almost like the crater of a volcano, out of which suddenly a tremendous cloud of filth came, darkening and soiling everything, so that above all the priesthood suddenly seemed to be a place of shame,” he said.

He expressed optimism about the Church’s recovery from the scandal, saying God continues to raise up Catholic saints. But he also said he understands why some Catholics, particularly victims, have responded by leaving the Church in protest.

“It is difficult for them to keep believing that the Church is a source of good, that she communicates the light of Christ, that she helps people in life — I can understand that,” he said.

The pope said media coverage of the abuse scandal was partially motivated by a desire to discredit the Church. But he added that the Church must be “grateful for every disclosure” and said the media could not have reported in this way “had there not been evil.

The pope also said he’s certain that the Church’s new rules and policies motivated by a desire to discredit the Church. But he added that the Church must be “grateful for every disclosure” and said the media could not have reported in this way “had there not been evil.

Contraception, sterilization not preventive health services, panel told

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Contraception and sterilization should not be included among mandated “preventive services” for women under the new health reform law, a spokeswoman for the U.S. bishops told an Institute of Medicine committee Nov. 16.

“As you study the vital question of preventive services for women under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, I urge you to focus on services that will offer authentic care and save lives,” said Dendrie McQuade, assistant director for policy and communications at the bishops’ Secretariat of Pro-Life Activities.

The Institute of Medicine’s Committee on Preventive Services for Women is charged with recommending to the Department of Health and Human Services a list of preventive services for women that will be mandated for all health plans under the new health reform law. HHS is to announce that list next August.

Addressing the committee at its first meeting, McQuade echoed a letter sent by the bishops to the General Counsel of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops to HHS Sept. 17.

“The conference has a particular concern that contraceptives and sterilization not be mandated as ‘preventive’ services,” she said. “To prevent pregnancy is not to prevent a disease — indeed, contraception ‘preventive’ services,” she said. “To concern that contraceptives and sterilization would violate the free exercise of conscience of those women under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act.”

McQuade also said the mandating of contraceptive and sterilization would violate the freedom of conscience of those women under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. “The important question is whether a woman’s health care plan is respecting her moral convictions,” she said.

The pope was asked if he considered resigning in the face of mounting criticism and a lack of enthusiasm of its members.

McQuade said that “in the future, the Legionaries of Christ would become a hollow pledge,” and that “the current coverage will be able to keep it under healthcare reform would become a hollow pledge,” she said.

acknowledge that more might have been done. He noted that in 2002, the Vatican and U.S. bishops established strict norms to curb sex abuse in U.S. dioceses.

“Would it have been Rome’s duty, then, to say to all the countries: Find out whether you are in the same situation? Maybe we should have done that,” he said.

The pope said that in responding to sex abuse allegations against the founder of the Legionaries of Christ, the late Mexican Father Marcial Maciel Degollado, “unfortunately we addressed those things very slowly and late.”

The Legionaries of Christ was founded in the future of the Legionaries, the pope said it was basically sound but needed corrections that do not destroy the enthusiasm of its members.

THE TRUTH OF THE EUCHARIST REVEALED...
Speaker accounts for Church’s love and respect for women

BY ANN CAREY

NOTRE DAME — The Catholic Church’s teachings on abortion, sex, marriage and contraception were the topic of a Nov. 11 lecture at Saint Mary’s College by Erika Bachiochi, theologian, lawyer and mother of five.

Bachiochi attracted the rapid attention of her mostly female student-faculty audience of 125 as she recounted her own transformation from an out-of-control teenager to a 12-step program that helped her realize how much her out-of-control behavior damaged her emotional and physical health.

As a freshman at Middlebury College, she embraced radical feminist causes, for she thought the feminism on campus were the only people who were more interested in real life issues than in pursuing the “party” lifestyle she had recently rejected. Of course, abortion rights were a part of the feminist agenda because babies were seen to be “a drag” on women who had important things to do in life. “I had taken for granted that women’s equality required abortion,” Bachiochi said.

However, during her junior year of college, she interned with a think tank in Washington, D.C., that assisted state legislatures in their effort to reform welfare. Then, she began to question the secular feminist agenda when she studied the role of abortion in the lives of poor women. Suddenly, the pursuit of truth became more important to her than the pursuit of self.

“As I became more and more immersed in the problems of the poor, especially poor women, I became more and more disgust ed with the argument put forth by abortion advocates that the availability of abortion would assist poor women on the road out of poverty,” Bachiochi recounted.

She said she was “haunted” by a solution to helping the poor that was based on helping them rid themselves of their own children. She also came to see the fallacy of the 1970s feminist mantra that bearing a child diminished a woman’s equality. In fact, she said, the unique ability of women to bear children does not take away from a woman’s fundamental human equality, but rather should be “honored and cherished” as the “most profound human experience” rather than ignored or, as in the case of abortion, rejected.

“Abortion is the problem, not the cure,” Bachiochi said. “Abortion eliminates the incentive to make institutional change” and is “a weapon to manipulate and abandon women.”

The real remedy for the women, she continued, is to “Rectify the imbalance of parental responsibility as well as the marketplace mentality that disfavors family obligation.” She suggested that society would be far better served if the energies expended by pro-abortion supporters would instead be focused on challenging “wayward men” to be fathers and challenging employers to be more flexible and family-friendly.

After her internship, Bachiochi returned to Middlebury a pro-life feminist and changed her major to political science. She rediscovered her Catholic faith, and came to see the Church teachings on sexuality not as repressive, but rather as “signposts” that marked off dangerous territory, teachings that protected women and were “liberating” for women.

Bachiochi recounted: “I came to see that the Catholic world view provided a far more satisfactory and compelling explanation of life as I knew it” than did radical feminism. “Like it or not, I was now playing for the other team.”

Playing for the Catholic “team” led Bachiochi to a master’s degree in theology from Boston College and a law degree from Boston University. She is a popular speaker, and has edited two books on life issues: “The Cost of Choice: Women Evaluate the Impact of Abortion” (Encounter Books, 2004) and “Women, Sex and the Church: A Case for Catholic Teaching” (2010, Pauline Books and Media).

Bachiochi’s lecture at Saint Mary’s was sponsored by the student club SMC for Life, Saint Mary’s Student Government Association, Saint Mary’s Campus Ministry and the Notre Dame Fund to Protect Human Life.
US trafficking law has led to more awareness of slavery, say advocates

WASHINGTON (CNS) Carmen Maquilon never expected she’d be on the frontlines of fighting crime. Her specialty: human trafficking. Her task: advocating on behalf of trafficking victims and their families in a battle to combat modern-day slavery — considered the fastest growing criminal activity in the world. As director of immigrant services at Catholic Charities of the Diocese of Rockville Centre, N.Y., Maquilon, a native of Colombia, and her staff have worked with dozens of trafficking victims since 2003. Their first big case came in 2004 after a raid on a Long Island factory uncovered 60 Peruvians working under grueling conditions and with little hope of escaping. “It turned into 125 because of the family members and others who came forward,” Maquilon told Catholic News Service during a break in a training program on the needs of crime victims in Washington Nov. 17. Maquilon’s office faced the daunting task of finding housing, providing counseling and ushering the Peruvians through legal proceedings so they could remain in the United States. Fortunately, she said, her agency had a useful tool on its side: the highly regarded Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000. The law gave the staff the ability to provide a wide variety of services that previously had been limited because of a lack of money. The Rockville Centre program is one of 108 nonprofits across the United States and its territories that have been subcontracted by Migration and Refugee Services of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops to provide vital services to foreign-born trafficking victims.

Survey says dioceses getting the hang of new media, but slowly

BALTIMORE (CNS) — Dioceses are getting the hang of a multiplatform media universe, according to the results of a survey conducted by the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops’ Office for Communications. The increase in media awareness is at least evident in those dioceses who responded to the 1989 U.S. diocesan communications offices survey, 89 returned the questionnaire. Among those dioceses who completed the survey, “there is great variation in the use of new media,” said the executive summary of the report, “Survey of Diocesan Media Usage,” which was dated October 2010. The dioceses were queried earlier in the fall. Copies of the report were available at the U.S. bishops’ Nov. 15-18 general meeting in Baltimore. “Some are just entering new media, others are immersed in it,” the executive summary said. “Therefore, diocese-

Executive orders spell out details of faith-based federal fund programs

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Executive orders issued by President Barack Obama Nov. 17 won both praise and criticism from organizations with an interest in how the initiatives of the White House Office of Faith-based and Neighborhood Partnerships affect federally funded social services. The six pages of orders affirmed fundamental principles for policies such as “no organization should be discriminated against on the basis of religious belief” and that organizations which receive federal funding are prohibited from discriminating against beneficiaries of social services on the basis of religion. The orders followed many of the major recommendations in a 106-page report sent to the White House in March by the President’s Advisory Council on Faith-based and Neighborhood Partnerships. The orders spelled out that faith-based organizations may participate in federal programs “without impairing their independence, autonomy, expression outside the programs in question or religious character.” Specifically, they cannot be required to remove or alter religious art or other symbols of faith from facilities where federally funded services are provided. Institutions also may include religious terms in their names, may select board members on a religious basis and include religious references in documents such as mission statements. People who receive social services also will be entitled to be referred to another organization if they object to the religious character of a provider. And each beneficiary should receive written notice of that option. The changes affect operating principles in place since President George W. Bush created the predecesor to the organization in 2001. When the office was reauthorized, the Office and gave it a somewhat broader focus in 2009.

Pope, at audience, recalls St. Juliana, feast of Corpus Christi

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The feast of Corpus Christi is an important occasion for Catholics to renew their faith in the true presence of Jesus Christ in the Eucharist, Pope Benedict XVI said. Speaking about the life of the little-known medieval nun who was the first to promote the creation of a feast celebrating the sacrament, Pope Benedict also said that frequent participation in Communion “is essential to the path of faith.” At the regular weekly audience Nov. 17, Pope Benedict praised the “zeal for the eucharistic cult” of St. Juliana of Mont Cornillon, Belgium. During her life from 1103 to 1158, the pope said, she was educated by Augustinian nuns, became one herself and served as abbess of an Augustinian community. At a young age, beginning at age 16, St. Juliana had a series of visions in which she was instructed to establish a feast day to celebrate the presence of Jesus in the Eucharist. She kept the vision secret for some 20 years until she found others who would help her promote the festival. Celebrating in 1144, Pope Benedict said St. Juliana convinced the bishop who would later become Pope Urban IV to create a special feast. After her death, Pope Urban created the feast of Corpus Domini, also known as Corpus Christi, and celebrated it for the first time in Orvieto, Italy, in 1264. Pope Benedict noted that the feast of Corpus Christi “has had a marvelous development and is still very much felt by Christian people.”

Bishop Soto named chairman of bishops’ CCHD subcommittee

BALTIMORE (CNS) — Bishop Jaime Soto of Sacramento, Calif., was named chairman of the bishops’ Subcommittee on the Catholic Campaign for Human Development. The appointment to oversee the domestic anti-poverty program was announced Nov. 17 during the executive session of the U.S. bishops’ fall general assembly in Baltimore. “I am honored to have the confidence of my brother bishops as I assume the chair for the subcommittee for the Catholic Campaign for Human Development,” Bishop Soto said in a statement. “CCHD has been an important national pastoral enterprise dedicated to infusing American society with the Catholic social teaching of human dignity, solidarity and communion.” Bishop Soto succeeds Bishop Roger P. Morin of Biloxi, Miss., who has led the subcommittee since 2007.

USF Feeds the Fort

FORT WAYNE — Around 34,000 food items were collected Nov. 16 at the wrap-up of the third annual USF Feeds the Fort, a food drive conducted by the University of Saint Francis to restock the shelves of local food banks to provide emergency food relief in time for the holidays for those in need. Items were delivered to Community Harvest Food Bank, the Associated Churches of Fort Wayne and St. Mary’s Soup kitchen.

USF Trustee Ian Rolland conceived of Feed the Fort in 2008, and this year’s drive began campus-and community-wide in September, under the organization of USF’s School of Creative Arts (SOCA).

Early in October, USF students constructed and occupied cardboard “shanties” east of the Hutzell Fitness Center along Leesburg Road as a visual representation of the struggles of homelessness. During a 12-hour period, they used the shanty town as a site for the public to donate canned and non-perishable food items for USF Feeds the Fort, as well as gently-used coats and blankets for the Fort Wayne Rescue Mission homeless shelter.

Local businesses, individuals and the campus community also made money donations to USF Feeds the Fort, and members of SOCA also banked $5,000 for distribution to the food banks.

Colleen Haddelson, assistant to SOCA Dean Rick Cartwright, said the campus community teamed on diverse efforts like pie-in-the-face events and passing the hat at football games to raise food and dollars for the drive.

Saint Mary’s continues to be recognized for study abroad efforts

NOTRE DAME — Saint Mary’s College continues to gain ground in its goal to increase the number of students participating in study abroad programs and expanding the international aspects of the on-campus curriculum.

Strengthening the college’s internationalization is a priority for President Carol Ann Mooney and one of the top 10 recommendations in her five-year strategic plan titled “The Path to Leadership 2012.” Under the recommendation, 50 percent of Saint Mary’s students would participate in study abroad programs by the time they graduate. The College’s Center for Women’s Intercultural Leadership (CWIL) oversees the study abroad program.

Saint Mary’s strategic plan also calls for increasing the number of international students on campus and expanding the international aspects of the on-campus curriculum.

Currently, the college, which has a student body of about 2,500, has 16 international students, including five exchange students. They are from China, South Korea, Mexico, Vietnam, Bolivia, Peru, Mexico and Australia. Efforts are underway to attract more international students. U.S. Catholics Key To Bringing “Sweeping Positive Change” To Haiti’s Desperately Poor Rural Villages

After visiting the desperately poor families who live in the rural parts of Haiti, Msgr. Michael Flanagan has dedicated himself to rallying support in America for their urgent needs.

Msgr. Flanagan believes that he and other Americans can play a unique role in the recovery of Haiti’s impoverished countryside. He urges U.S. Catholics to seize this opportunity to help this sister parish overseas.

“In Matthew 25:31-46, Jesus gave us a preview of the final judgment, and the power of those words burned in my soul as I walked through the rural villages of Haiti,” Msgr. Flanagan said. “When Jesus related the last judgment of mankind, he made the shocking revelation — that help given to the poor would equate to help given to him, and that those who ignored the poor would be judged as if they had ignored Christ himself. The connection to Haiti is obvious to all who will listen. These destitute villages are where Christ abides today. He is there among the poor, calling for our help.”

Flanagan also encourages Catholics to see the Judgment story in Matthew as a blessing rather than as a source of anxiety or fear.

“Who among us wouldn’t be joyful to serve our Lord if he were to appear here among us now? We shouldn’t see our actions in Haiti as simply feeding a child among us now? We shouldn’t see our anxiety or fear. What could be more inspiring than that?”

Flanagan also pointed to other key verses in scripture that magnify the importance of the poor in God’s plan for blessing his people.

“Isaiah 58:5-11 is another powerful passage. It explains that we are most pleasing to God when we help the needy and bring relief to the poor,” he said. “And it contains a powerful promise to those who reach out in compassion — ‘then your light will break forth like the dawn and your wound shall quickly be healed; Your vindication shall go before you and the glory of the Lord shall be your rear guard. Then you shall call, and the Lord will answer; you shall cry for help, and he will say: Here I am! ’ As Catholics, we rightly respect the Eucharist and other Sacraments as important means of grace. Here, God is showing us another way we can be blessed — by responding in love to people in need.”

Ultimately, a generous response from American Catholics to the needs in rural areas of Haiti could have a tremendous impact, he added.

“If we rise to this occasion and help the poor in these troubled spots in Haiti, we can create sweeping positive changes in those villages. The sick can be healed, the hungry fed — lives literally can be saved,” Msgr. Flanagan said. “Remember Matthew 25:31-46. When you feed the hungry and care for the sick in Haiti, you will be responding to Christ himself!”

Cross Recognized, Endorsed by Nearly 50 U.S. Catholic Bishops

As Cross International Catholic Outreach (CICO) continues its range of relief work to help the poor overseas, its efforts are being recognized by a growing number of Catholic leaders in the U.S.

“We’ve received an impressive number of endorsements and letters of support from American Bishops and Archbishops — nearly 50 Catholic leaders at last count,” explained Jim Cavnar, president of Cross International Catholic Outreach. “They’re impressed by the fact that we’ve done outreaches in more than 40 countries and that we undertake a variety of projects; everything from feeding the hungry and housing the homeless to supplying safe water and supporting educational opportunities for the poorest of the poor.”

Archbishop Robert Carlson of St. Louis sent one of the more recent letters of encouragement, writing: “It is my hope that this ministry will continue to flourish and reach as many people as possible. I will inform the priests of the Archdiocese of St. Louis of the important work that Cross International Catholic Outreach does and elicit their prayerful and financial support for the service you provide to the less fortunate around the world.”

Bishop Kevin Vann of Fort Worth was just as enthusiastic about Cross Catholic and its mission. “I also know that many of the Bishops in Texas think very highly and endorse the work and mission of Cross International Catholic Outreach — as well as do other Bishops whom I know from my days of graduate studies in Rome. Please know of my prayers and support for this vital work...”

In Archbishop Gregory Aymond’s case, the endorsement came with a personal note of thanks for the role Cross Catholic played in helping families hit hard by Hurricane Katrina.

“I’m happy to acknowledge that Cross International Catholic Outreach was of tremendous help to the Archdiocese of New Orleans after Hurricane Katrina,” he said.

Bishop Thomas Rodi of Biloxi had similar praise.

“You’re quick response to the needs of the people in south Mississippi in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina will always be remembered and greatly appreciated,” he said. “Thank you for all the good you do, and may God bless you and your ministry.”

In addition to praising the work CICO accomplishes, many of the Bishops and Archbishops are also impressed by the unique collaborative relationship Cross has with the Pontifical Council Cor Unum in Rome. This allows the charity to participate in the mercy ministries of the Holy Father himself. In his praise of CICO, Archbishop Dennis Schnurr of Cincinnati underscored this unique connection.

“Cross International Catholic Outreach’s close collaboration with the Pontifical Council Cor Unum is a source of encouragement,” the Archbishop said. “The Holy See has unique knowledge of local situations throughout the world through its papal representatives in nearly two hundred countries and through its communications with Bishops and others who care for the poor and needy in every corner of the world.”

CICO president, Jim Cavnar, explained the significance of this connection.

“Our collaboration with Cor Unum allows us to fund outreaches in virtually any area of the world, and we have used that method in special cases — to help the victims of natural disasters, for example,” he said. “It only represents a small part of our overall ministry, but it can be a very important benefit in those special cases.”
“Before God sent the missionaries here, we had lost hope,” says Roland Dersaint, a 36-year-old father of three. "The children here in Kobonal were dying of sickness. Many families were surviving only by eating green mangoes. But it wasn’t enough to save the weakest. We often saw families walking down the road with tiny coffins — sometimes as many as five little ones would be buried in a single day.”

A few years ago, Roland and Mary Dersaint pulled a tiny coffin of their own down the long dirt road. Inside was their nine-month old baby, Rosalie.

"Typhoid took her," Roland explains, looking away to hide his grief.

In the years before the missionaries came, circumstances like these defined life — and death — in Kobonal, Haiti. This isolated section of Haiti’s Central Plateau is plagued by hunger, illness and the other marks of extreme poverty. In fact, before the missionaries came, as many as one out of three children died before reaching age five.

Roland and Mary Dersaint’s story of loss is very typical in this part of Haiti, according to Father Glen Meaux. When Fr. Meaux and other members of the Society of Our Lady of the Most Holy Trinity (SOLT) came to Kobonal from America more than 10 years ago, they were shocked by the severity of poverty in the Central Plateau. In fact, as the group was driving into Kobonal villages for the very first time, they passed a group of families with tiny coffins coming down from the mountains to bury their children.

“It was heartbreaking, but it was also an important experience for us because it humbled us and showed us how difficult life is for the poor. It taught us that our life — and death — in Kobonal, Haiti, is what motivates us. And, frankly, it should motivate every Catholic. Expressing compassion and serving others are at the very heart of the Gospel. As Catholics, we preach it and we should be living it out.”

When the Kobonal Mission was founded, Father Meaux first sought to eliminate the hunger and malnutrition that plagued Haiti’s Central Plateau. His group launched a special program to provide food for the poorest of the poor, including vulnerable women and young children. That program was recently expanded through support from Cross International Catholic Outreach and its family of donors.

After responding to this basic human need for food, the missionaries looked for ways to create a lasting change in the area — ways to help the poor break the cycle of poverty and become self-sufficient.

“Through our efforts, many poor families wanted to grow crops, but they had no land of their own to cultivate. We looked for ways to acquire land and to supply these families with the help they needed to begin small farms,” Fr. Meaux explains.

This idea impresses Cross International Catholic Outreach’s president, Jim Cavnar, and he hopes to encourage American Catholics to support the project.

“When I heard about their plans to help these poor families, I immediately thought of that powerful passage in Isaiah 58, where the Lord promises to bless those who respond to the poor with compassion. From verse 6, it reads: ‘This, rather, is the fasting I wish: releasing those bound unjustly, untying the thongs of the yoke; setting free the oppressed, breaking every yoke; sharing your bread with the hungry, sheltering the oppressed and the homeless; clothing the naked when you see them, and not turning your back on your own. Then your light shall break forth like the dawn, and your wound shall quickly be healed; your vindication shall go before you, and the glory of the Lord shall be your rear guard.’ The Kobonal Mission exemplifies this spirit of mercy in action,” Cavnar says. “Cross seeks out partners like this — ministries that are clearly led by the spirit of God, and leaders who find innovative ways to address the needs of the poor.”

Cavnar went on to explain the details of the Kobonal Mission farming project.

MISHAWAKA — Audience members of the Festival of Lessons and Carols can prepare to take a brief journey through salvation history, Joe Higginbotham, director of liturgy and music at St. Bavo Church said.

The service, which was first held in 2005, has traditionally been offered once per year. With a full house last year, Higginbotham said the service is expanding, offering two dates and locations.

“Last year we had a full church, so it’s really been growing,” he said. “The kids really do a great job so people really look forward to it. I’ve got a lot of wonderful feedback from it.”

Higginbotham said the Festival of Lessons and Carols has grown each year, estimating that about 250 attended in 2005 and about 400 last year. Hopes are high for this year’s attendance, and Higginbotham said he estimates about 700 to 750 people will be present.

According to Higginbotham, the second service was created to offer the Festival of Lessons and Carols to more members of the community.

“The second service will allow more people the opportunity to come because no matter when you have it, some people can’t come. …” Higginbotham said. “Plus (when) you have it at a different place, it expands the possibilities.”

The Festival of Lessons and Carols incorporates nine Scripture readings, leading the audience through the history of salvation in the Catholic Church. Higginbotham said the lessons start with a reading from the Book of Genesis, and end with a reading from the Book of John.

“There are just Scripture readings that really are generally people’s favorites,” he said. “They’re really powerful about who we are as a Church and where we’ve been and where we’re headed. Those are just our stories, so to speak.”

Father Bob Lengerich, parochial vicar at St. Pius X Church in Granger, will preside at both services.

“Father Lengerich is awesome. He does a brief reflection, a couple minutes or so, after each of the nine readings,” Higginbotham said.

According to Higginbotham, the audience can also expect to listen to a variety of carols, including “Joy to the World” and “Angels We Have Heard on High.” In addition, two original songs written by Higginbotham will be presented at the service.

“There are about 18 pieces of music,” he said. “There’re generally about two carols or anthems after each reading.”

The choir is composed of students from the Antioch Youth Group and Marian High School. He expects about 35 members for the choir and the instrumental accompaniment.

Higginbotham said the Festival of Lessons and Carols dates back to 1880.

“The first outline was drawn up in like 1880 by Edward White Benson, and he later became archbishop of Canterbury,” he said. “He wanted to come up with a new service for Christmas Eve that would make it some variety to the service at his cathedral.”

According to Higginbotham, people are drawn to the Festival of Lessons and Carols because the service allows for reflection.

“People just really love the beauty and the power and the humility of the whole Christmas story,” Higginbotham said. “It’s just a really special time of year. People do generally get a little bit more reflective. I think it’s just a really special season. People are a little bit more aware of religion.”

The first service will be held on Dec. 5 at 3 p.m. at St. Joseph Church, located at 255 S. Mill St. in Mishawaka. The second will be Dec. 19 at 3 p.m. at St. Bavo Church, located at 511 W. Seventh St. in Mishawaka.

Greeting Christ as the One who comes

Reflections on the liturgical season of Advent

The earliest evidence we possess concerning the season of Advent comes from around the 4th century. In Spain and France, Christians celebrated a six-week fast preceding the celebration of Christmas (just as they also practiced a Lenten fast, as we still do today, preceding Easter, though the emphasis of the Advent fast seems to be the inculation of ascetical discipline rather than as a liturgically-oriented process of preparation for Baptism). A synod held at Saragossa (Spain) in AD 380 reminded the faithful that they should attend church daily from Dec. 17 through Jan. 6, Epiphany.

A century later in France, there is evidence of a three-day per week fast (on Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays) beginning on the feast of St. Martin (Nov. 11) and extending to Christmas; this season was frequently referred to as “St. Martin’s Lent.”

St. Gregory the Great (+ AD 604), bishop of Rome, records a cycle of four Sunday celebrations just prior to Christmas — much like our four Sundays of Advent. This indicates the Roman preference for a shorter (four weeks) as opposed to longer (six weeks, as in Spain and parts of France) Advent season. In any case, it seems that these early Christians understood the “heart” or “core” of the Advent season to be the octave preceding Christmas itself (Dec. 17-24).

Recent scholarship has dismissed the overly-faicle idea that Christians simply adapted a pagan feast, the “sol invictus,” for their own purposes. The historian of the liturgical year, Thomas Talley, has suggested that, in fact, the Christmas celebration on Dec. 25 quite possibly pre-dated the Constantinian toleration of Christianity, and thus the choice of the date, while later a convenient competitor to the pagan feast, nevertheless does not have its origins in paganism.

Advent, derived from the Latin “adventus,” meaning “coming” or “arrival,” is, of course, more than just a preparation for Christmas. Theologically, there is a two-fold focus to the season of Advent, and this is revealed in the prayers and readings used at Mass and in theLiturgy of the Hours.

For the first three weeks in particular, the focus of the prayers and readings is on the coming or arrival of Christ at the end of time as Judge of the living and the dead as we profess every Sunday in the Creed. We are called to focus on the “advent” of Jesus who comes to bring to completion the kingdom He began with His life and ministry. Often, this eschatological dimension of the season is absorbed or lost entirely in the midst of the frenetic activity of preparing for Christmas.

In most Catholic households, influenced by a secular culture of consumerism and materialism, the “season” of Christmas begins even before the civil holiday of Thanksgiving, with decorations and advertising prematurely proclaiming the coming of the Christmas season.

In fact, many Catholics are unaware of this eschatological focus of early Advent. Like the last few Sundays of Ordinary Time, which helpfully provide a segue to the eschatological component of the Advent season, there is an emphasis on vigilance and the removal of those obstacles — most obviously sin, which impede the believer from such vigilance. The collects and readings are about readiness and reception: readiness to greet Christ and the capacity to receive Him with gladness when He comes. For the believer, it is an excellent opportunity to reflect upon the Church’s hope — and perhaps to correct many misconceptions about Catholic teaching on the return of Christ in glory and the fruition of His Kingdom.

Current fascination — even among Catholics — with the “Left Behind” series as well as curiosity about “the Rapture” or “the Tribulation” (dubious apocalyptic prophecies that have only the rudiments of a coherent system and culture around them) is on the coming or arrival of Christ at the end of time as Judge of the living and the dead as we profess every Sunday in the Creed. We are called to focus on the “advent” of Jesus who comes to bring to completion the kingdom He began with His life and ministry. Often, this eschatological dimension of the season is absorbed or lost entirely in the midst of the frenetic activity of preparing for Christmas.

By the Fourth Sunday of Advent (or on Dec. 17, whichever comes first), the emphasis has clearly shifted. The “advent” we now hear about and pray for is the coming of the Incarnate Son of God at the Nativity, that particular moment in human history when Jesus was born of Mary. We hear in the readings at Mass the prophecies of Hosea, in which His birth, and the prayers used at Mass reflect this, as well.

In fact, the collects for Mass, particular to each weekday, offer a precis of our faith in Christ’s coming and themselves offer hints for the preacher. December 17-24 provides a particularly intense experience of this Advent focus. In the 7th century, we are told what the O Antiphons were composed for prayer in preparation for the solemn feast of the Nativity at Christmas, and are more popularly known today as the verses of the hymn “O Come, O Come, Emmanuel.”

If we rely on the Church’s liturgy (as we should) to provide us with some pointers about how we can live and pray the season of Advent in our own lives, we discover a number of profound themes: preparation, readiness, expectation, joyful hope, a spirit of penitence, reformation of life, and the beauty of the Incarnation.

In modern times, dying is more and more often portrayed as a cold, clinical reality to be kept at arm’s length, relegated to the closed doors of a hospital, almost hermetically sealed from the rest of our lives. When it comes to the event itself, we diligently work to avoid confronting it, addressing it, or acknowledging it. Because of this cultural backdrop, patients receiving a diagnosis of a terminal illness can be tempted to indulge in unrealistic expectations about what lies ahead, clinging to unreasonable treatment options and hoping for highly improbable outcomes.

The patient-survival curve for various terminal diseases often shows patients clustered around the median survival time of perhaps several months or a year or two, with survivability extending out along a more slender tail into the future for an ever smaller number of people. Yet rather often, that long tail seems to become the focus, even the obsession, of so many patients and doctors. As Dr. Atul Gawande put it recently in a thought-provoking essay in The New Yorker:

“There is almost always a long tail of possibility, however thin. What’s wrong with looking for it? Nothing, it seems to me, unless it means we have failed to prepare for the outcome that’s vastly more probable. The trouble is, we have little or no experience to draw upon when these matters come upon us in the first person. Yet when doctors and nurses are willing to have the hard discussions and say what they have seen, when families become willing to acknowledge death and mortality, and when spiritual preparations are allowed to hold priority of place, patients can better and more peacefully prepare for what lies ahead when they receive the summons of approaching death in the form of a terminal illness.”

Surviving the holidays

Composing generations after the ancient Covenant, God promised to protect and secure the people, although the people themselves could, at least for a while, bring catastrophe upon themselves by their sins. The almighty God will judge the good and the bad. Such is the divine right. It also, pure and simple, is logical; all behavior must be balanced against the justice and love that are in God. All must conform to God’s law. The faithful hasten the day of their security by loving God and obeying God. St. Paul’s Epistle to the Romans is the source of the second reading. Always, Paul called upon Christians to live as authentic followers of Jesus. While stressing the need to be faithful models of Christ in human living, the Apostle urged disciples to set their priorities by the standard that eternal life is the goal. Moreover, each Christian may face the end of earthly life at any time. Every human will face the end of earthly life. For the Roman Christians of this era, the end very well might come in the form a gruesome death after being convicted of the crime of Christianity. So, Paul had a genuine task to accomplish in encouraging and challenging Roman converts to live as Christians.

The Gospel of Matthew, the last reading, predicts the final coming of Jesus. Beneficial reading of the Gospels requires realizing two perspectives: 1) The Gospel event in the actual time of Jesus; 2) The event as its implications came to be understood in the time when the Gospels were written, decades after Jesus; and, 3) The place that the event occupies in the general literary structure of the individual Gospel.

Composed generations after Jesus, Matthew was written for Christians who wanted to be relieved of the burden, and indeed peril, of living amid harshly antagonistic circumstances by experiencing the second triumphant coming of Jesus. Recalling the Lord’s own words, the Gospel reminded those Christians, and reminds us, that indeed Jesus will come again in glory.

Reflection

Advent, begun in the liturgies of this weekend, calls us to prepare for Christmas. Preparation is much, more than addressing Christmas cards and decorating Christmas trees. It means actually working to make the coming of Jesus into earthly life, commemorate on Christmas, a truly personal experience. For the Roman Christians of this era, the end very well might come in the form a gruesome death after being convicted of the crime of Christianity. So, the Church calls us to be good Christians and to rid ourselves of anything standing in the way.

It calls us to set our priorities. Regardless of Christmas 2010, Jesus will come again to earth to live his most glorious, victorious and final sense. We will meet the Lord, as God’s judge, after death. We must prepare to meet the Lord. We must refine ourselves as honest disciples of the king born in Bethlehem. We must shape our lives with priorities in mind.

The New Translation of the Holy Mass:

The First Sunday of Advent

Several weeks ago, we published an introductory article about the new English translation of the Roman Missal, the prayer book for the Mass. All of us will start using this new translation in one year, on the First Sunday of Advent (Nov. 27) in 2011. Advent is the beginning of the Church’s liturgical year, therefore offering an ideal time for such an important change, which has been in the making for four decades.

There will be a great many benefits to the new translation of the Mass meant to reflect the Latin texts, which are many centuries old and have a tremendous history behind them. The prayers of the Mass are also very Scriptural in their origins, and the new translation will more effectively draw out the biblical references that have not been as clear in our current translation. Again, accuracy in translation will be a hallmark of the new Missal, and this will bring with it stronger theological content and catechetical opportunities.

Another fruit of the new translation will be its beauty. It will feature a rich, dignified and often poetic language — markedly different from our everyday conversational English today, or from the style of our current Mass prayers.

The advantages of the new texts are best illustrated by example. The following is the current opening prayer for Mass this Sunday, the First Sunday of Advent:

All-powerful God, increase our strength of will for you, so that Christ may find an eager welcome at His coming and call us to His side in the kingdom of heaven...

Now, when we begin using the new texts in a year, the same prayer from the same Mass will look like this in the new translation:

Grant, we pray, almighty God, that your faithful people, resolved to run forth with righteous deeds to meet your Christ who is coming, so that, gathered at His right hand, they may be worthy to possess the heavenly kingdom...

As we take Holy Communion, we are given a taste of eternal life

Does taking Communion guarantee entrance into heaven? Hil, Fort Wayne

The answer is yes and no. Certainly, we cannot take Holy Communion and then do whatever we want, morally speaking. Those who die in a state of grace go to heaven, and if we die in a state of mortal sin, unrepentant of our sins, then heaven is not open to us no matter how many Communions we may have taken.

On the other hand, the taking of Holy Communion is important for us as a sign of grace. It is an antidote to the tendency to sin, and those who receive this heavenly food grow in the desire not to sin. It certainly does not take away our free will. We are still capable of mortal sin, but the grace of the Eucharist turns us from our selfishness and helps us to begin living a heavenly life now.

As Jesus says in the Gospel of John, “He who eats my flesh and drinks my blood has eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day.” Notice that Jesus does not say “He who eats my flesh and drinks my blood has eternal life.” “But He who eats my flesh and drinks my blood has eternal life” — “... So even now as we take Holy Communion, we do get a taste of eternal life, and once we have tasted eternal life, we want nothing else.

What is the difference between adoration (idolatry) and veneration regarding imagery including relics?

Catholics in the Southwest celebrate festivals revering certain saints and have processions carrying figures related to the celebration. In Tucson, radical religious fundamentalists use crafty gimmicky schemes to challenge Catholics using such customs by condemning them for worshiping statues and thus winning converts. JG, Tucson

First it must be said clearly that we Catholics do not worship saints. We worship God who made them in the first place. However, it is truly good and right to honor saints. By honoring the saints we honor God because we honor what God did in them to make them holy.

Statues and other images of saints are used to help us honor them. Humans communicate through the senses, and to have images of the saints helps us through our senses to bring to our minds and hearts the holiness of the saints and their continual intercession for us. To do this is to honor God who made them holy and who desires that they should continue to intercede for us. It is also clear that we as Catholics do not worship the statues themselves, as the pagans did with their many “gods.”

Finally, regarding relics, we believe that as we live the Christian life, God wishes to “divinize” us, as the early fathers of the Church put it, that is, that God wishes to make us like Himself. This process of divinization will be perfect when we get to heaven and will include our own bodies resurrected after the second coming of Jesus.

Divinization occurred in the saints to such a high degree even while they lived on earth that permeated even their bodies. We venerate their remains as a sign of the high degree of heavenly life that permeated even their bodies. A sign of this to us from heaven is the fact that some saints’ bodies do not decay after death or sometimes parts of the bodies of saints do not decay, for example, the tongue of St. Anthony of Padua and the body of St. Catherine of Bologna.

Father Mark Guntern, pastor of St. Anthony de Paduas Parish in South Bend, answered this week’s questions.

Volunteers – On a mission

It all began, simply enough, with a community service project in high school, helping out and doing whatever needed to be done at a nursing home. Then as now, there was no shortage of chores the young student was called on to undertake. And then, as she recalls today, “little by little” she came to see how much the elderly residents appreciated her care. Little by little, too, she began to realize how important the work was. And thus were the first seeds of a vocation born — a vocation that would flourish, and one day would affect the lives of thousands of others.

That girl of years ago was Joan Raber, the school was Presentation High School in San Francisco, and the residence where she volunteered was St. Anne’s Home, conducted by the Little Sisters of the Poor. Today Joan Raber is Mother Celine de la Visitation, General of the entire Little Sisters community — nearly 5,000 strong, staffing 203 homes in 32 countries around the world. These days, when she speaks of the value of volunteers to the community — and she does that often — the thought that she was once a volunteer herself is rarely far from her mind. If anything, it deepens her appreciation of the important role that volunteers play.

The Little Sisters are quite an organization. They were founded in France in 1839 by St. Jeanne Jugan (canonized by Pope Benedict XVI in 1982), who took an elderly and destitute woman into her home — toiled her up the stairs, the story goes — and took care of heart and home. That heroic act of volunteerism would be the building block for what became the Little Sisters of the Poor, for that one woman was followed by another, and then several, and soon Jeanne needed more volunteers to help her — and so a community was born.

The mission of the Little Sisters of the Poor is uncomplicated. They take care of the elderly poor, period. They give them a loving home, prepare their meals, care for them if they’re sick, and journey with them when they’re dying. In an age of billion-dollar deals and trillion-dollar budgets, they support themselves in the old-fashioned way: by begging. That’s right, begging.

They’re serious about it, going from business to business, interrupting to merchant with outstretched hands and loving hearts, grateful for gifts large and small — anything that helps the mission go forward.

And always, there are those volunteers. I caught up with Mother Celine when she visited one of the Little Sisters’ homes, in northern New Jersey. “I can’t say there’s nothing to do,” she told me with a smile. “Our needs are more pressing than ever.”

Maryknoll Father James Keller had something in common with Jeanne Jugan; they both understood the value of volunteers.

“Alert, bright and generous” was the way Father Keller thought of volunteers, relying on their help when he founded The Christophers in 1945 — making them, in fact, a cornerstone of his movement. Jeanne Jugan thought of them in the same way, and so does Mother Celine today.

“There is no time,” Mother Celine said to me, “when the Little Sisters did everything. There were no employees, no volunteers — we did it all. Now, of course, it’s different. Now we rely on others to help us.” She paused before she added, “And we’re so thankful that they’re there.”

Dwenger cheerleaders sweep state, make history

BY MICHELLE CASTLEMAN

FORT WAYNE — For the first time ever in the state of Indiana, one high school grabbed all three titles at the state cheerleading competition championships. The Bishop Dwenger squads, varsity, junior varsity and freshman, swept the coveted trophies for their respective divisions at the high school competition held in Anderson on Oct. 23.

The freshman and junior varsity groups each claimed a state title for the second year in a row. Then on Nov. 6, the varsity squad was crowned the Class 3-A state champions. The title marks the fifth time in the record books that the Saints’ dominating program has won.

With 50 on their roster, Coach Amy Gonzagowski could not be more proud of her group, “It requires a lot of dedication.”

The girls start practice in July four days per week. Once classes begin, the workouts continue two days per week plus another day of gymnastics. One week prior to the state competition, the varsity team must compete at a qualifier.

Gonzagowski creates the junior varsity and freshman routines while the expertise of Morton Borges of California is called upon to choreograph the varsity performances.

Gonzagowski feels the Saints stand out because of their skills and unique routines. “We pride ourselves on being innovative,” she explains.

The 2010-2011 season consisted of four other competitions prior to the state showdown. The varsity squad will continue preparing for national level competition in February 2011 where they were reserve grand champions a year ago in Orlando, Fla.

The Saints are led by their exceptional seniors — Audi DiDomenico, Morgan Eifert, Jessie Paladino, Victoria Myers, Alana Richardson and Grace Grutsch. Myers was named to the elite group of 12 from the entire state to the Indiana All-State team. For her accomplishment, Myers will receive a $250 college scholarship.

Of the 22 young ladies on the varsity team, 16 junior varsity members and 12 freshman, there are five sets of cheer sisters.

First as an assistant for 19 years, Gonzagowski took over the head coaching position four years ago from her mother, Vicki Kuker, who still assists. Doris Derheimer also assists.

allude to blood, is a symbol of life and love” as demonstrated by Christ’s ultimate sacrifice for the salvation of all, the pope said.

During the consistory Nov. 20, the pope assigned the new cardinals a “titular church” in Rome, making them members of the Rome diocesan clergy, which is what the Church’s first cardinals were. Cardinal Burke’s titular church is St. Agatha of the Goths; Cardinal Wuerl’s is St. Peter in Chains, the church famous for hosting Michelangelo’s statue of Moses.

The consistory to create new cardinals took the form of a prayer service in St. Peter’s Basilica. With the exception of the pope’s homily and the prayers of the faithful, the service was in Latin. It was the first papal service featuring the new director of the Sistine Chapel Choir, Msgr. Massimo Palombella, and the musical innovations included a brass section and the Psalm sung by a trio.

Outside the basilica a storm was approaching and as Pope Benedict announced the name of the new Cardinal Laurent Monsengwo Pasinya of Kinshasa, Congo, the applause for him was accompanied by a roll of thunder.

At the end of the service, the College of Cardinals numbered a record 203 members, with 121 cardinals under the age of 80 and eligible to vote in a conclave to elect a new pope. With the induction of Cardinals Wuerl and Burke into the College of Cardinals, the United States has 18 cardinals, 13 of whom are under the age of 80.

Only Italy has more cardinals. With 10 new cardinals, Italy has a total of 48 members of the college, 25 of whom are under 80. In his homily, Pope Benedict said he chose as cardinals “pastors who govern important diocesan communities with zeal, prelates in charge of dicasteries of the Roman Curia or who have served the Church and the Holy See with exemplary fidelity.”

The Gospel reading used for the prayer service was St. Mark’s account of the disciples vying for a place of honor with Jesus, and Jesus telling them, “Whoever wishes to be great among you will be your servant; whoever wishes to be first among you will be the slave of all.”

Pope Benedict told the new cardinal’s that Jesus’ “style of living became the basis of new relationships within the Christian community and of a new way of exercising authority.”

Even after Jesus explained to the disciples that following him would involve suffering, they demonstrated that they had “expectations and plans for greatness, authority and honor in the eyes of the world,” the pope said.

Jesus was patient with them, he said, but he also made it clear that to be his disciples they must be totally obedient to God and follow “this road that passes through humiliation, suffering and death for love.”

Pope Benedict told the new cardinals they must recognize that becoming “unique and precious collaborators in the papal mission to serve the Church is not an honor they can take credit for, but is a vocation to which they are called.”

Jesus’ teaching that authority means humble service is a message that continues to be valid for the Church, “especially for those who have the task of guiding the people of God,” the pope said. “It is not the logic of domination, of power according to human criteria, but the logic of bowing down to wash feet, the logic of service, the logic of the cross, which is at the basis of every exercise of authority.”

Cardinal Angelo Amato, the prefect of the Congregation for Saints’ Causes who worked closely with the pope as secretary of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, addressed the pope on behalf of his fellow new cardinals.

He told the pope that being called to the College of Cardinals “gives rise to us to feelings of awe for the magnanimity and love of the Holy Father for us. With trepidation we recognize our limits before the awareness of the great dignity with which we are being clothed and which we are called to give witness to with our lives and our activities.”

Meeting reporters after the consistory, Cardinal Wuerl said it was “a glorious day” with the basilica filled with people from around the world, showing the universality of the Church.

“Every believer, every Catholic has a tie with the pope, but the cardinals — because they are asked to work very, very closely with him — have a special bond,” he said, and the visible sign of that is the red hat.

The cardinals, with their family members and faithful, met Pope Benedict again Nov. 22 during an audience reserved for the new cardinals and the groups who traveled with them to Rome for the consistory.

Speaking Italian, French, English, German, Spanish, Portuguese and Polish, the pope congratulated each of the 24 new cardinals. He also asked the family members and faithful to support the new cardinals with “your constant prayers and your cooperation in their efforts to build up the Body of Christ in unity, holiness and peace.”

At the end of the audience, each of the new cardinals was allowed to present to the pope two adults in his entourage; most of the new cardinals introduced their siblings to Pope Benedict.
