FORT WAYNE — A trio of dynamic speakers, Confessions, and Mass celebrated by Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades encouraged men to accept their role as spiritual leaders at the Feb. 25 diocesan men’s conference. Concentrating on the theme, “a call to lead,” Father Andrew Bedzinski, parochial vicar of St. Vincent de Paul Parish in Fort Wayne, offered a challenge to the 1,400 men gathered: “Consider how you will concretely lead in imitation of Christ in your parish, family and marriage.”

Held at the Allen County War Memorial Coliseum and Exposition Center in Fort Wayne, the Feb. 26 event brought representatives from 70 parishes across the diocese and some participants traveling from as far away as Texas, Tennessee, Pennsylvania, Michigan and Ohio. Rekindle the Fire and the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend presented the second annual conference.

Franciscan Father David Mary Engo began the day’s talks centering on the sacrament of Reconciliation. He described God’s mercy as the ocean and when we confess our sins, it is as if we are throwing drops of water in the ocean of mercy. Priests from across the diocese heard confessions throughout the day.

In the afternoon session, Father Engo told the men, “We need to deepen our understanding of the faith,” and meet the challenges of the culture.

Lent: A journey of conversion

BY BISHOP KEVIN C. RHOADES

“Repent, and believe in the gospel.” With these words, Jesus began his public ministry. He calls us to conversion. We hear this call anew every year during the season of Lent. The Catechism of the Catholic Church teaches that our Lord’s call to conversion “does not aim first at outward works, ‘sackcloth and ashes,’ fasting and mortification, but at the conversion of the heart, interior conversion. Without this, such penances remain sterile and false; however, interior conversion urges expression in visible signs, gestures and works of penance” (CCC 1430).

Prayer, fasting, and almsgiving are good and important practices during Lent and are a great help to our spiritual growth. They help us on our journey of conversion. However, these practices must not be performed only as an external fulfillment, but as the expression of our interior disposition: the conversion of our hearts, what the Fathers of the Church called cumpunctio cordis, “repentance of heart.”

Our external works of penance are to be accompanied by an interior desire to return to the Lord, to turn away from evil. We ask the Lord to help us to overcome sinful habits, to cleanse us of un holy desires, and to purify un-Christian ways of thinking or acting that may have crept into our lives. Sometimes, we can experience powerful forces within us, temptations to sin, that we find hard to resist. During Lent, we resolve to do battle with sin in our lives. We say to God: “Be merciful, O Lord, for we have sinned.” We ask the Lord to take us by the hand and lead us along the way He wishes us to follow.

The Catechism describes interior repentance as “a radical reorientation of our whole life, a return, a conversion to God with all our heart, an end of sin, a turning away from evil, with repugnance toward the evil actions we have committed. At the same time it entails the desire and resolution to change one’s life, with hope in God’s mercy and trust in the help of his grace” (CCC 1431).

The good news of Lent is that God gives us the strength to begin anew. He gives us his grace. We think especially of the great gift he has given us in the Sacrament of Penance and Reconciliation. Jesus instituted this sacrament to offer us a new opportunity to convert and to be restored to God’s grace. It brings about a true “spiritual resurrection” in us. In a sense, we pass from death to life when we go to confession and receive absolution. I encourage all to receive this sacrament of conversion during the season of Lent.

As I mentioned, prayer, fasting, and almsgiving are important forms of penance during this Lenten season. They are to be expressions of our “interior penance.” Recall the preaching of Isaiah in the Old Testament. The people were fasting and they did not understand why God did not seem to notice this or reward them for their fasting. The problem was that their exterior fasting did not express interior penance. In fact, God reprimanded them through Isaiah, telling them that their fasting was not acceptable to him because it was merely external. They were unjust in their dealings with others and ignored those in need.

It should not be surprising that God ignores fasts or other practices if those who perform them commit sins against justice and charity. God says he will have nothing to do with the hypocrisy of those who perform fasts but behave wickedly, whereas he will certainly listen to prayers and fasting if they are accompanied by acts of justice and charity. This is a warning to us not to just go through the motions of religious observance. The corporal and spiritual works of mercy are signs of authentic conversion and growth in holiness. Love of neighbor and works of mercy manifest true love of God. When we examine our consciences, it is important to ask ourselves whether the fruits of love are present in our lives.

Pope Benedict’s Lenten message this year focuses on the following passage from the letter to the Hebrews: “Let us be concerned for each other, to stir a response in love and good works” (Heb 10:24). The Holy Father highlights concern for others, responsibility towards our brothers and sisters, as essential to the Christian life. This “concern for others entails desiring what is good for them from every point of view: physical, moral and spiritual.” He cites two parables of Jesus as examples for us: the parable of the Good Samaritan and the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, both found in the Gospel of Luke. “Both parables show examples of the opposite of ‘being concerned,’ of looking upon others with love and compassion.” Pope Benedict states that “reaching out to others and opening our hearts to their needs can become an opportunity for salvation and blessedness.”

Acts of charity towards our neighbors are part of our Lenten journey of conversion. I think especially of almsgiving, by which we express concrete concern for the poor.

During this Lenten season, let us not forget the priority of interior conversion, the conversion of the heart. Our hearts are moved to this conversion when we look upon him whom our sins have pierced.

Saint Clement of Rome wrote: “Let us fix our eyes on Christ’s blood and understand how precious it is to his Father, for, poured out for our salvation, it has brought to the whole world the grace of repentance.”

On Ash Wednesday, we heard the words of Saint Paul imploring the Corinthians: “on behalf of Christ, be reconciled to God!” This invitation rings out to us to take the Lenten call to conversion seriously. God wants to create a pure heart in us. Let us open our souls to God’s grace and live intensely this holy season, this journey of conversion towards Easter!
States, women, senators join fight against HHS contraceptive mandate

BY NANCY FRAZIER O'BRIEN

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Seven states have filed suit against the Department of Health and Human Services’ mandate that nearly all health insurance plans cover contraceptives free of charge, saying that it violates religious freedom and leaves “countless additional religious freedoms vulnerable to government intrusion.”

Joining the attorneys general of Nebraska, South Carolina, Michigan, Texas, Florida, Ohio and Oklahoma in the lawsuit were a Catholic nun, a lay missionary working with the Fellowship of Catholic University Students, Pius X Catholic High School in Lincoln, Neb., and the Omaha-based Catholic Mutual Group, a self-insurance fund that covers more than 125 dioceses or archdioceses and 200 Catholic religious congregations in the U.S. and Canada.

The latest lawsuit was filed as protests against the HHS mandate mounted. More than 4,500 women signed a letter calling on President Barack Obama, HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius and Congress “to allow religious institutions and individuals to continue to witness to their faiths in all their fullness.”

In addition, 18 U.S. senators asked Obama to rescind the mandate, saying that its implementation “will unjustly impact religiously affiliated organizations and individuals.”

The mandate requires no-cost coverage of all contraceptives approved by Food and Drug Administration, including some that can cause an abortion, as well as sterilizations, as part of preventive health services for women. A narrow religious exemption applies only to those employed by houses of worship.

In a revision announced Feb. 10, Obama said religious employers could decline to cover contraceptives if they were morally opposed to them, but the health insurers that provide their health plans would be required to offer contraceptives free of charge to women who requested such coverage. He also announced a one-year “safe harbor” before enforcement of the mandate would begin for religious employers.

The lawsuit by the seven attorneys general, all Republicans, followed earlier suits filed by Belmont Abbey College in North Carolina and Colorado Christian University in Denver; the Eternal Word Television Network in Birmingham, Ala.; and Ave Maria University in Naples, Fla.

“The First Amendment has, for centuries, served as a rampart against government interference with religious liberty,” says the brief filed with the U.S. District Court for Nebraska. “The federal government’s regulation is an unprecedented invasion of the plaintiffs’ First Amendment rights to free speech, free exercise of religion and free association.”

Stacy Molai of Omaha says in the lawsuit that they would drop their health insurance coverage if the contraceptive mandate is not overturned.

Molai has “an inchoate constitutional condition” and health insurance coverage “is critical in order for Molai to avoid financial ruin and possibly life-threatening consequences,” the lawsuit says.

The open letter from women was organized by Helen Alvare, who teaches law at George Mason University School of Law, and KimDaniels, former counsel to the Thomas More Law Center, under the banner, Women Speak for Themselves (http://women-speakforthemselves.com).

“No one speaks for all women on these issues,” the letter says. “Those who purport to do so are simply attempting to deflect attention from the serious religious liberty issues currently at stake.

“Each of us, Catholic or not, is proud to stand with the Catholic Church and its rich, life-affirming teachings on sex, marriage and family life,” it added. “We call on President Obama and our representatives in Congress to allow religious institutions and individuals to continue to witness to their faiths in all their fullness.”

Alvare said the effort to collect signatures for the letter began with an email to a few of her and Daniels’ friends and grew exponentially.

“Almost every email (reply) contained a letter expressing the woman’s enormous relief at the chance to speak for herself, Alvare said in a news release.

“It is moving to read more than 1,000 emails — particularly from doctors, nurses and teachers — expressing their gratitude for the Catholic Church’s willingness to stand down the government’s claim to speak for all women and women’s health.”

The letter from 18 Republican senators said the president’s revised rule “leaves few viable options for religiously affiliated organizations and individuals to avoid using their funds to pay, directly or indirectly, for services they consider morally objectionable.”

Among the options would be to drop health insurance coverage for their employees or to limit hiring only to Catholics in order to fit the administration’s “narrow definition of a religious employer,” they say.

“Because religiously affiliated hospitals and other organizations are major employers in many communities, ... it is hard to comprehend why this administration would deliberately implement a policy that would have such a detrimental impact,” the senators said.

Profit cannot be primary motive in treating infertility, pope says

BY CINDY WOODEN

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — An almost exclusive reliance on technology and a focus on financial profit seem to dominate the field of medical responses to infertility, Pope Benedict XVI said.

However, what couples need and deserve, he said, is “a correct diagnostic evaluation and a therapy that corrects the causes of infertility.”

Pope Benedict spoke Feb. 25 to members of the Pontifical Academy for Life, which had just held a daylong workshop at the Vatican on diagnosing and treating infertility.

“The pope said he wanted “to encourage the intellectual honesty of your work, an expression of a science that maintains a correct spirit of seeking the truth to serve the authentic human good and that avoids the risk of being merely functional.”

At the conference, physicians and researchers said modern medicine’s almost automatic recommendation that couples have trouble conceiving try in vitro fertilization is a response that does not seek the cause of infertility, but addresses only the symptom and does so in a way that violates Church teaching.

With in vitro fertilization, a woman’s eggs are removed, united with sperm in a laboratory, and then implanted in the womb of the mother or a surrogate.

The procedure is costly, and the Catholic Church teaches IVF is immoral because fertilization does not take place through the sexual union of a husband and wife. The Church also condemns the common IVF practice of destroying or freezing fertilized embryos that are not implanted.

“In effect, scientism and the logic of profit today seem to dominate the field of infertility and human procreation, reaching a point where it also limits many other areas of research,” Pope Benedict said.

The physicians and scientists at the Vatican conference, however, are motivated “by the desire not only to give a couple a child, but to restore the spouses’ fertility and the dignity of being responsible for their procreative choices in order to collaborate with God in the generation of a new human being,” the pope said.

Doctors must help fulfill “the legitimate parental aspirations” of a couple dealing with infertility, he said, but they must do so in a way that “fully respects their dignity as persons and spouses.”

In addition, he said, Catholic couples need to know that their marital vocation is not diminished if they cannot have children. The couple is still called to love and self-giving, and “to collaborate with God in the creation of a new humanity” and a better world, he said.

Papal preacher calls for deeper understanding of celibacy

BY ANN CAREY

NOTRE DAME — The preacher to the Pontifical Household in the Vatican headlined an impressive lineup of speakers at a Feb. 15-17 symposium at the University of Notre Dame that examined priestly celibacy.

Archbishop Allen Vigneron of Detroit presented a paper on “The Fatherhood of the Celibate Priest.” He said that the tradition of celibacy results in happy priests who are better able to shepherd their people.

Cantalamessa, shown here in this photo April 2, 2010, file photo delivering the homily during the Good Friday service in St. Peter’s Basilica at the Vatican, was the keynote speaker at a recent celibacy symposium sponsored by the Institute for Church Life at the University of Notre Dame and the Committee for Doctrine of the USCCB.

Cantalamessa started the event with a keynote talk that called for a deeper understanding of celibacy based on biblical and theological roots so that celibacy is seen as “a freely accepted commitment and a gift of grace,” not simply a functional discipline that frees a man for ministry.

Msgr. Stephen Rossetti, a psychologist who has studied the priesthood, closed out the symposium with the good news that a solid majority of priests embrace celibacy as a benefit to their priesthood, especially those with a good understanding of the theological-Spiritual basis for celibacy.

The papal preacher calls for deeper understanding of celibacy

Archbishop Allen Vigneron of Detroit presented a paper on “The Virginity of Jesus and the Celibacy of His Priests.” The archbishop said that the people of God need to be educated about the worth of priestly celibacy. The fact that Jesus lived in a state of virginity is “a sure point of reference” to understand the tradition of celibacy in the Church, he explained.

The covenant between God and His people is nuptial, he continued, for God espouses His people, and Jesus gave His virginal self to the Church and to no one else. Thus, celibate priests share this identification with Christ and serve as heralds of the new evangelization.

Archbishop J. Peter Sartain of Seattle presented his paper on “Celibacy and the Pastoral Ministry of the Priest.” He said that the mystery of the Lord is revealed in priestly celibacy in four ways: By being a man of prayer and staying close to God; by living celibacy as an abiding presence of Jesus and as a sign of single-hearted commitment to loving God and His people; by being a good father to his pastoral family, making a gift of himself to the Church; and by his participating in the sacrifice of Christ through the Eucharistic celebration.

Mary Healy, an associate professor of Sacred Scripture at Sacred Heart Major Seminary, spoke on the biblical foundations of celibacy. She said that in the Old Testament, celibacy as a religious ideal did not exist because marriage and children were considered a “primordial blessing.”

However, in the New Testament the entire new concept of a “fruitful virginity” was introduced at the Annunciation, she explained. Later, Matthew, the evangelist, speaks of remaining unmarried for the kingdom of heaven as a gift given by God. And Jesus Himself implies that celibacy for the good of the kingdom is rooted in His own mystery, “the God who desires to wed His people,” with the ministry of the disciples being a participation with Jesus, the bridegroom, she said.

Jesus’ Father Joseph Lienhard, professor of theology at Fordham University, talked on “The Origins and Practice of Priestly Celibacy in the Early Church.” The reasons for embracing celibacy in the early Church were threefold, he explained: eschatological — celibacy for the sake of the kingdom; theological — the Church is the bride of Christ; and Christological — the priest acts in the place of Christ, who is a model for celibacy.

Msgr. Michael Heintz, director of the Master of Divinity Program at Notre Dame and rector of St. Matthew Cathedral in South Bend, talked about “Celibacy and Human Formation.” He said that too often celibacy is discussed only in terms of sexual renunciation. Rather, celibacy should be viewed positively as a charism, a gift, a grace that is freely and joyfully chosen so that the priesthood can be shared with, and on behalf of, others.

Father Carter Griffin, vice-rector of Blessed John Paul II Seminary and director of vocations for the Archdiocese of Washington, spoke on “The Fatherhood of the Celibate Priest.” We are accustomed to thinking of Jesus as the Son, he said, but Jesus is also a father in his own right, for the viralg Jesus acts as father in providing physical and spiritual food, teaching, healing, protecting and generating children for the kingdom of Heaven.

Thus, the celibate priest, who is configured to Christ, is appropriately called “Father,” for he is a sanctifier, teacher and shepherd who begets children for eternal, heavenly life. It is the “greatest privilege” of a priest to exercise this supernatural fatherhood, Father Griffin said.

“In an age that struggles with priestly identity, this is a compelling and refreshing way to grasp our identity as priests,” he said, for celibacy is “not a burden, but a gift to be treasured.”

The final presentation of the symposium was given by Msgr. Stephen Rossetti, clinical associate professor at The Catholic University of America, where he also is associate dean for Seminary and Ministerial Programs. He is author of the book “Why Priests are Happy: A Study of the Psychological and Spiritual Health of Priests” (Ave Maria Press, 2011).

Msgr. Rossetti said that his study found that priests are happier than their lay counterparts, and he has the data to prove it. His 2009 survey showed that 92 percent of priests expressed happiness with their lives. Likewise, 75 percent of priests say that celibacy has been a grace for them, while only 15 percent said they would marry if the Church allowed it. The youngest priests were the most supportive of celibacy, which he attributed to the younger men being more theologically conservative and better trained in a richer understanding of celibacy during seminary.

As priests become more knowledgeable in this area, celibacy is disappearing as “a hot-button issue” among clergy in the United States, Msgr. Rossetti said.

The symposium was sponsored by Notre Dame’s Institute for Church Life and the Committee for Doctrine of the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops, with the assistance of Lilly Endowment’s Sustaining Pastoral Excellence Program. Ave Maria Press will publish a book containing the symposium papers this fall that will be available from the publisher and most booksellers.
INDIANAPOLIS — Promising young, college students have come to Sen. Jean Leising (R-Oldenburg) with a problem. The problem: a new state law has brought these bright students’ pursuits of a college degree to a screeching halt.

Victoria, who recently brought this to Leising’s attention, is one example. Victoria, a student with junior status at Indiana University and a 4.0 grade point average in her major of international studies had her college education abruptly cut short this fall. Why? She was required to pay out-of-state tuition because of a new law effective this year, which prohibits undocumented students who reside in Indiana from getting in-state tuition.

Tuition for Victoria, now at almost three times what she was paying last year, made it impossible for her to return last fall. Victoria is waiting now, and unsure when or if she’ll be able to finish her college degree. Leising would like to change this especially for college students who were already attending college when the law changed. Leising is not alone. The Indiana Catholic Conference, the official public policy arm of the Catholic Church in Indiana, also supports the effort.

“We are supportive of efforts to help undocumented college students complete their college education,” said Glenn Tebbe, education, “said Glenn Tebbe, education,” said Glenn Tebbe, Catholic Church in Indiana, also supports the effort.

“Our students like Victoria who were already enrolled in college when the law changed. The amendment does not help kids that are currently in grades K-12. Last year, the Indiana General Assembly passed a law to prohibit undocumented immigrants from receiving in-state tuition. It stipulated that students must be lawfully present to qualify for in-state tuition rates. The Indiana Catholic Conference opposed the legislation. "Until last year, high school graduates entering college could get in-state tuition even if they did not have legal status," said Leising. "Student’s like Victoria are funding 100 percent of the tuition by their hard work and hard work of their family. Undocumented immigrants are not able to get financial assistance for college." "What I’m doing is trying to help students like Victoria and many like her who were already enrolled in college when the law was passed and are not able to complete their college education because it is cost prohibitive to do so," said Leising. "The young women I have talked to were brought to this country when they were in preschool," said Leising. “They have attended school from grades K-12 and are as Americanized as any other American child would be. These kids would be misplaced if they went back to their home country.” “In a sense we are throwing a road block in front of them because they can’t afford the out-of-state tuition. And especially they can’t because they do not qualify for any kind of state student assistance. I do not believe that they should qualify for state student assistance, I’m not advocating that, but I just want them to be able to complete their college education so that hopefully they can continue to pursue their legal status,” she said. “These kids all want to be legal,” said Leising. “One young person came to see me with her immigration attorney. The immigration attorney told me that there are young adults who are in their early 20s that might have to wait up to 20 years to achieve legal status because they have aged out of the system.” According to the immigration attorney, Leising said that when a child ages out of the system that means it basically took the system too long to grant them legal status, so the process starts all over again and the person must apply in a different category. “These kids are in the prime of their life as far as working and career making, yet they potentially will not have access to a legal status, or may have to wait 20 years to get it,” Leising said. Currently, 12 states have laws allowing undocumented students who meet specific requirements to receive in-state tuition according to an October 2011 report issued by National Conference of State Legislatures (NCSL). California and Texas were the first to enact laws in 2001. Utah, Washington, Oklahoma, New York, Kansas and Illinois also have similar laws allowing undocumented to pay in-state tuition. Four states including Indiana prohibit in-state tuition for undocumented students. Arizona passed its in-states prohibition in 2006. Colorado and Georgia passed a similar law in 2008.

HHS mandate presents problems of principle, practicality, bishop says

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The Department of Health and Human Services’ contraceptive mandate poses an extremely narrow range of egregious exemption present problems both of principle and of practicality, according to the bishop who heads the Ad Hoc Committee for Religious Liberty. Bishop William E. Lori of Bridgeport, Conn., said in a Feb. 23 telephone interview with Catholic News Service that the “accommodation” announced Feb. 10 by President Barack Obama “does not really address how we are organized” as Church institutions. “It seems to me that for the government to ask us to override our teachings, whether popular or not, there has to be a compelling government interest,” Bishop Lori said. But he said 90 percent of insurers already cover contraceptives, with companies that object to contraceptive representing a “relatively small number” of employers. “The insurance plans that are in question are good benefits packages, but they don’t include those things that are abundantly available elsewhere and at a reasonable cost, despite what is being said,” he added. Obama’s revised mandate says religious employers could decline to cover contraceptives if they were morally opposed to them, but the health insurers that provide their health plans would be required to offer contraceptives free of charge to women who requested such coverage. Bishop Lori questioned why the federal government would compel coverage of contraception but leave other decisions on other essential health services, such as coverage of high blood pressure medication or HIV/AIDS drugs, to the states under the health reform law. “It’s hard to see how that is a compelling government interest” when other important treatment decisions are left to the states, he said.

Pope: Charitable works "an intrusion into the internal life of the Church that we think is a violation of religious liberty." On a practical level, he added, the mandate as revised by Obama “does not really address how we are organized” as Church institutions. “It seems to me that for the government to ask us to override our teachings, whether popular or not, there has to be a compelling government interest,” Bishop Lori said. Pope: Charitable works

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — An authentic Christian faith is demonstrated through concrete acts of charity and those acts are a key part of the Catholic Church’s new evangelization effort, Pope Benedict XVI told members of a Rome-based charity. “The witness of backbreaking labor hearts in a special way,” the pope said, and “the new evangelization, especially in a cosmopolitan city like Rome, requires a great openness of spirit and a wise readiness to help all.” The pope made his remarks Feb. 24 during an audience with members of the Circulo di Santa Marta, which operates soup kitchens and a shelter in Rome, but also raises money for papal charities. “We know that the authenticity of our fidelity to the Gospel is verified in part by the attention and concrete care that we try to show our neighbors, especially the weakest and the marginalized,” he said. True concern for others means trying to meet all their human needs, “physical, moral and spiritual,” and “overcoming the hardness of heart that makes us blind to the suffering of others,” the pope said.

Maryland leaders pledge to put same-sex marriage issue on ballot

BALTIMORE (CNS) — The Maryland Catholic Conference’s executive director, vowing to work with others to bring the measure to the state Senate approved it 25-22 the day that the state lawmakers’ action “poses a grave threat to the future stability of the nuclear family and the society it anchors.” The Archdiocese of Washington said the measure was “regrettably” passed through “expedited hearings” and despite the fact that “Catholics and individuals across Maryland encouraged the lawmakers to protect the long-standing and proper definition of marriage as a union of one man and one woman.”

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (CNS) — Since first learning in December that Blessed Kateri Tekakwitha was to be canonized, the head of a group named for her in Syracuse Diocese said those who have a devotion to the saint to be “walking on air.” Bishop William E. Lori of Bridgeport, Conn., said in a Feb. 23 telephone interview with Catholic News Service that the “accommodation” announced Feb. 10 by President Barack Obama “does not really address how we are organized” as Church institutions. “It seems to me that for the government to ask us to override our teachings, whether popular or not, there has to be a compelling government interest,” Bishop Lori said. NOTRE DAME conference explores theology of Pope Benedict XVI

NOTRE DAME — The Institute for Church Life at the University of Notre Dame will host the upcoming God Is Love: Explorations in the Theology of Benedict XVI conference from March 25 – 27. The event will be held at McKenna Hall on the Notre Dame Campus, and is open to the public. Registration is now live at http://icl.nd.edu/ and is required for all participants.

The gathering is a reflection on the ongoing theological career and achievement of Joseph Ratzinger (Pope Benedict XVI), which commences in the 1950s in his reflection on Augustine and Bonaventure. This career — over a period of almost 60 years — is characterized by insightful theological commentary on every conceivable theological topic, repeated soundings in biblical interpretation, consistent interventions in the public arena, faithful advocacy of the value of the Catholic tradition and its practices, and a catchetical mindset that concerns itself with the beliefs and forms of life of the average Catholic living in the modern world.

In addition to offering general theological thought, the papers presented will cover Pope Benedict as a doctrinal, biblical, practical, and catechetical theologian. Classic texts such as “The Introduction to Christianity,” “The Spirit of the Liturgy,” and Pope Benedict’s recent two-volume “Jesus of Nazareth” will come in for detailed discussion.

Even as pontiff, Pope Benedict remains a theologian; attention will be paid to continuity and differences between texts produced as Joseph Ratzinger and those produced by Pope Benedict XVI. The pope’s encyclicals and especially “God is Love,” will be a focus throughout.

A complete schedule of events as well as registration information is available at http://icl.nd.edu/icl-events/god-is-love-theology-of-benedict-xvi-conference/.

SOUTH BEND — For generations of the Kloska family of Elkhart, stewardship of time, talent and treasure has been a way of life. Irv and Bonnie Kloska raised 12 biological children, one adopted child (now deceased) and nurtured 11 foster children in their nearly 50 years of marriage. The high school sweethearts moved to the area from Grand Rapids, Mich., and first attended Holy Cross Church in South Bend before moving to Elkhart where they’ve been parishioners at St. Thomas the Apostle Church for 40 years.

Irv said when it comes to stewardship, “The first thing you tend to think of is financial. But it’s a lot more than that. It’s time, talent and treasure.”

He said he personally likes to think of the big picture of stewardship and admits that’s partially because with raising such a big family they had to make their money stretch.

“We put 12 kids through Catholic schools and college — that’s why I’m still working,” Irv said.

The couple believes that sending their children to Catholic schools and colleges has been a form of stewardship and they continue to support Catholic education. Irv said multiplied by the number of children it equals about 200 years of Catholic education and hundreds of thousands of dollars. Aside from supporting education and their parish, other favorite charities include the Women’s Care Center in South Bend and Food for the Poor.

“The rosary is an extremely important tradition in our lives and we’ve handed out hundreds of rosaries.”

Stewardship of Prayer

The Kloskas have served their parish in just about every ministry over the years, giving of their time and talent where they could. These days their stewardship of time and talent is mainly through a ministry of prayers for healing.

“Irv said in 1997, through a variety of means, he was made aware of a gift to pray for healing for someone. He said, “People have come to us from all over and we’ve gone lots of places. It gives us an opportunity to evangelize as it seems as if most are non-Catholics or lapsed Catholics,” he said.

“We tell everyone what Catholics really believe about Mary and about the Real Presence of Christ in the Eucharist,” he said.

Investing in children

Irv and Bonnie feel part of their stewardship is raising a big family in the Catholic faith, taking in foster children and sponsoring children.

“We believe that was our contribution to society — wanting to help children who needed it,” Irv said.

“It was good for our children,” Bonnie said. “They were able to “mother” the little infants and they knew they were here only temporarily.”

They almost always took in babies as foster children with the exception of their son Johnny, who they eventually adopted and who lived with them until he died in a car accident six or seven years ago at the age of 20. Twice they took in single mothers and their children that Bonnie met at the Women’s Care Center.

The couple always prayed the rosary with their family during Lent but after their first visit to Medjugorje in 1988 that family rosary became a daily event and they continue to pray the rosary daily.

“Now every one of our kids prays the rosary with their families — even little ones can sit still for one decade,” Bonnie said. “The rosary is an extremely important tradition in our lives and we’ve handed out hundreds of rosaries.”

Second generation

Irv and Bonnie’s children — Theresa Thomas, Cheryl Murphy, Karen Swick, Robert Kloska, Lisa Marino, Jennifer Nolan, Michael Kloska, Jeffrey Kloska, Mary Kloska, William (BJ) Kloska, Cathy Downey and Joey Kloska — are all very involved in their individual parishes, schools, school boards and various servant ministries.

“I’m so proud of them and how they’re living their Catholic faith in South Bend. ‘I told them the worst thing they could do to hurt us would be to leave the Church.’”

Daughter Lisa Marino has been the RCIA instructor at St. Matthew Cathedral in South Bend for the past 12 years, but has been an RCIA instructor for 20 years since she got out of college. Daughter Cheryl Murphy ran Catholic Charities in Elkhart until she married and began her family. Their son Bobby is in charge of campus ministries at Holy Cross College in South Bend. Cathy Downey and her husband taught at Saint Joseph’s High School and her husband is a football coach. Theresa Thomas writes for Today’s Catholic and has published a book. Karen has foster children and BJ found an “app” for his phone so when he is traveling on business he can find the nearest Catholic Church within walking distance to attend Mass.

Mary has done missionary work in Tanzania and is now a hermit with an official blessed hermitage.

“Dad always told us, ‘To those who have been given much, much is expected and you’ve been given everything,’” she said.

The Kloska children were taught that just by the grace of being born in America with all the abundance and religious freedom they’ve been given much. Cheryl said her stewardship heritage is not surprising because “You are formed by what you grow up with,” she said.

She doesn’t remember her parents ever using the term “stewardship.”

“We watched our parents; they lived it. We were aware that they supported the Church financially. They opened their home to foster children. You see it and you’re... formed by it,” she said. She said she and her husband Mike try to do the same thing with their six children by the way they share their faith, time and almsgiving. She said there have been years when it’s been easy to give to the Church and charities, and years when it hasn’t. She gave an example of a time when the family they sponsor through CFCA needed to rebuild their mud hut home and Cheryl’s dishwasher was broken and she was pregnant at the time. They chose to go without a dishwasher for nine months so they could send extra money to the family.

“For those months I washed dishes by hands it was a reminder to pray for the family. It made me feel more connected,” she said.

Her husband is a graphic designer so the children have been able to witness him using his talents to serve the Church. Many of the Kloska’s 56 grandchildren are also carrying on the legacy of servitude. The Murphy children range in age from four to 14. The 14-year-old daughter volunteers at the Women’s Care Center and is waiting to be old enough to do some things on her own. “She really loves it,” her mom said.

The Murphys also take their children to the pro-life march at the courthouse each year. They’ve taught their children that it’s their responsibility to share their faith, explain and defend it. “When your children can see how you approach problem solving using your faith — you can’t buy that kind of example for your kids,” Cheryl said.

Mary said stewardship is more than just writing a check. “It’s walking that extra mile — going to the store with someone in need and shopping with them. And when you don’t have enough, praying for generous people to step up.” Bonnie said the entire family pulls together and gets on the same page when God is nudging one of them in a certain direction. Her husband Irv summed it up with this statement, “Stewardship does not only have to do with the Church, but it also has to do with the Body of Christ.”

Irv Kloska is shown by the altar erected in his backyard. The Kloska family home is also used for retreats for the mission teams at Holy Cross and small groups.

Christian stewardship — abandonment to God’s will

At the core of “Christian stewardship” there is a radical sense of abandonment to God’s will. This abandonment is an offering of one’s heart to God like “a clump of wax,” as St. Francis de Sales would say — “ready to receive the impression of God’s will.”

This is a matter of detachment from those things that we think are more important than God’s work. Whatever it is we give up this Lent, we should be sure to give up our will and take on God’s will for our existence.

Stewardship is a way in which we ask ourselves, “What is God asking me to do through me?”

St. Therese Lisieux, a beautiful Christian steward, always insisted that what really matters is not the greatness of our deeds, but that our deeds are done in obedience to God’s will as an expression of love for God. We should not be impressed by the grandeur of our deeds.

Most of us are not, since most of us are ordinary people living ordinary lives — humdrum day-to-day lives, made up of many petty affairs. Yet, every one of those little under-takings is an opportunity to express our love for God and to live His will. This, of course, means that the present moment is so important because we can abandon ourselves to God right now, in this very moment.

This “abandonment” is the Christian steward’s response, just as St. Paul responded on the road to Damascus, regardless of his past sins and regardless of our past sins. At the present moment we too can ask: “Lord, what will you have me do?” — Acts 9:6.

This is Paul’s response to the risen Lord after being confronted with the truth of his own sinfulness. How do we respond to the truth of our own sinfulness? Christian stewardship gives us a means of responding, not only in words, but also in action.

Father Jozo Grbes, OFM was born in Bosnia-Herzegovina and was a young man when the Medjugorje visions started in 1981. Father Jozo has studied Our Lady's messages over the past thirty years and encourages all to respond to her urgent call to conversion and peace. He will give an update on Medjugorje at the conference and testimony to the tremendous good fruit that has come through Our Lady's appearances.

Father Paul Nomellini served the Church as a religious brother for twenty years before his ordination to the priesthood in 1990. He went as a skeptic to Medjugorje in 1990. His experience there made him a believer and he has since led four pilgrimages to Medjugorje. Since his retirement as a pastor, he is busier than ever giving retreats and missions around the country. Father Nomellini's Medjugorje testimony is very inspiring.

Cathy Nolan is co-founder (with her husband Denis) of Mary TV, a lay apostolate dedicated to using modern communication technology to promote the call of Our Lady from Medjugorje. Cathy is co-host of the daily online rosary and writes a daily reflection on Our Lady’s messages from Medjugorje. Mark and his wife Muriel have eight children and are founders of the Faith and Family Foundation, established to support and encourage families with special needs.

Doctor Theodore Homa is a medical doctor from Chicago who was an atheist before his trip to Medjugorje. In 2008 he had a brush with eternity after lapsing into a coma while awaiting a heart transplant. His testimony is one of the most inspiring examples of a Saint to have been made in modern times. Doctor Homa says, “If this had happened before Medjugorje, I’d be in hell now.”

Doctor Joseph Bagiackas has a Ph.D. in systematic theology from Catholic University of America. He is an expert on the theology of the lady and has written Lay Person’s Guides to the Medjugorje messages. The fruit of Christian stewardship is the action of the response, and the response of a Christian steward is an act of holiness — because holiness consists of following the design of God and accepting all that comes from Him. Therefore, stewardship is a call to holiness.

Look at the lives of the saints. Every saint was truly a Christian steward. They were made holy by God, according to His plan, because they abandon themselves to God’s will. Read the lives of the saints and see that they lived lives, according to their state of life, according to what God designed for them. Some saints were rich, others poor, some in mainstream society, others obscure; yet, what they had in common was that each of them — in their own state of life — sought to please God by doing God’s will. Consider your state in life and contemplate what God wants to do through you.

Christian stewardship offers us the opportunity to express our love for God by giving proportionately, according to what God has given us. But to a great extent, Christian stewardship offers us complete and total submission to God to do with us as He wills. Christian stewardship is a call for all Christians to abandon themselves to God’s will.

Contraception: What’s a Catholic to think?

T he current controversy over the HHS mandate has elevated the issue of birth control to national prominence. In so doing, it has raised questions in the minds of many people, including many Catholics, about why the Church opposes contraception and sterilization in the first place.

What does faith have to do with family planning? Many people sincerely wonder. Does God really care how many kids we have, what care how many kids we have, what — whether we get our tubes tied when we get our tubes tied when we have our babies? Does God really give a hoot?

To begin to understand where the Church is coming from on this issue, we first need to see the “big picture” from the perspective of both history and theology.

For the vast majority of Christian history, all the major churches, not just the Catholic Church, taught that contraception and sterilization were seriously wrong. This opposition was known to the early Christians, but was widely accepted by the Christian faithful. In fact, when Anthony Comstock, a devout New England Protestant, proposed to Congress in 1873 a federal statute, which would criminalize the possession, distribution and dissemination of information about contraceptives, it passed with little debate.

The first break in the constant teaching of the Christian churches came in 1930, when the Anglican Church decided at its Lambeth Conference to permit the use of contraception among married couples for serious reasons. A short while later, Pope Pius XI issued the encyclical “Casti Connubii” in response, reaffirming the clear and consistent Christian doctrine on the sanctity of marriage and the immorality of contraception. Then in 1960, the birth control pill was introduced, and its proponents promised, among other things, that better marriages would result from more spontaneous and satisfying sex lives free from the fear of pregnancy.

Pope Paul VI issued his prophetic encyclical, “Humanae Vitae,” eight years later, when the sexual revolution was in full swing.

The plan for Lent

B y the time you read this, it will be about a week into Lent. My family and I have already attended Ash Wednesday Mass and hopefully will have delved into the penance and fasting that we’ve planned. Perhaps we will have met our goals.

But, if we have, I’m sure we’ve come some humility, as we will have already faltered and will need to recom mend and try again.

In the suggestion of friend and editor of Today’s Catholic, I’m going to tell you what our family is striving to do for Lent.

My family’s plan will include prayer. In terms of this, however, because at this point, what I write we intend to do may or may not have become reality.

My plan is: road to you know where is paved with good intentions, stressing the point that actions speak louder than words. Of course this is true. However, the other side of the coin is also accurate: “a journey begins with the first step” and that if and when we falter the answer is not to give up, but to reconsider and try again.

I share our plans hopefully to encourage. I share our plans hopefully to inspire. But mostly, I share our plans because I write down in this column what we’re proposing to do, that I’m personally prepared to follow through. It’s like announcing to your family that you’re planning on going on a diet, and they help you. Oh, they help you.

On the second Sunday of the season, the Church leads us into this period to prepare for Holy Week and Easter.

Our theme is love. It is profound. God is everything. We are humans; we are limited. Always, amid our limitations, to relieve us in our limitations, God has provided. God provided for Abraham, God spared Isaac, but only after being assured of Abraham’s unflinching faith. Faith is indispensable in our search for, and path to, God.

The Gospel of Mark provides the last reading. As was the case with the reading from Genesis, this weekend’s first reading, this selection is very familiar. It is the story of the Transfiguration.

In this story, Jesus takes Peter, James and John to the summit of a high mountain. There, in an overwhelming, stupendous, even terrifying appearance, Jesus is transfigured. He becomes visible to the Apostles as the Son of God.

Light is everywhere. In the Old Testament, God is associated with light. Indeed, the presence of God constitutes the difference between darkness and light. God is the Lord of life, and of light.

Mountaintops were the places on earth nearest to heaven. In a hopeful, awkward attempt to come as as close as possible to God, humans went to the tops of mountains. Indeed, the temple in Jerusalem was at the summit of Mount Moriah. Jesus was crucified on a hilltop. He ascended from this hilltop. In a fulfillment, all earthly fogs and veils are cast down. Jesus appears in the reality of divinity. In this divinity, in eternal life itself.

The presence of Moses and Elijah indicates that Jesus is fully and abso lutely in the historic train of God’s communication with, and salvation of, God’s people.

Reflection

The novelty of Lent has ended. This weekend, we are observing the second Sunday of the season. Now, the Church leads us in earnest into this period to prepare for Holy Week and Easter.

Our theme is love. It is profound. God is everything. We are humans; we are limited. Always, amid our limitations, to relieve us in our limitations, God has provided. God provided for Abraham, God spared Isaac, but only after being assured of Abraham’s unflinching faith. Faith is indispensable in our search for, and path to, God.

Faith is the opposite of selfishness and of foolishly over exaggerating our limited human abilities. God is Jesus. Jesus is Lord.

This is the great message of the Transfiguration given us this weekend in Mark’s Gospel. It was Paul’s word to the Christian Romans. If we have Jesus, we have God. In God, we lack nothing.

READINGS

The tragedy of liberal Catholicism

In a Feb. 14 note to his people, Cardinal Francis George, the archbishop of Chicago, commented on the question of “who speaks for the Catholic Church,” which had become the object of public controversy thanks to the Obama administration’s “contraceptive mandate” — which is, of course, an abortifacient and sterilization mandate as well. The cardinal noted the administration’s crude attempt to play divide-and-conquer with the Catholic Church in the United States, a ploy in which some nominally Catholic groups quickly acquiesced. Yet something important in all of this is being missed, the cardinal suggested: “…the bishops of the Church make no attempt to speak for all Catholics; they never have. The bishops speak for the Catholic and apostolic faith, and those that hold that faith gather around them. Others disperse.”

The diaspora, in this case, was entirely predictable: columnists and politicians who had questioned the administration’s mandate, and organizations and associations that had raised serious questions about it when it was first announced, quickly fell back into line when the administration, on Feb. 10, announced an “accommodation” that was an obvious shell game, a ruse that didn’t change the moral issue involved one whit.

Others, however, continued to gather around the bishops, who rejected the “accommodation.” And they will prevail.

The administration is on the shakiest of legal ground in attempting to impose contraception, sterilization and abortifacients as “preventive services” that must be provided, on demand and with no co-pay, in all health insurance programs. As my friends Edward Whelan and David Rivkin pointed out in the Wall Street Journal on Feb. 15, there is every reason to think that the administration’s mandate, even as tweaked by the false-flag “accommodation,” will fail to go further in the test of the First Amendment’s protection of the free exercise of religion and the test of the Religious Freedom Restoration Act.

But what about the diaspora: those Catholic individuals and organizations that re-embraced the administration as soon as Caesar announced his “accommodation” (or, in the case of Sister Carol Keehan and the Catholic Health Association, helped Caesar trot out his ruse)? These individuals and associations typically think of themselves as “liberal Catholics,” a self-description proudly trumpeted by one of their spokesmen, Washington Post columnist E.J. Dionne Jr. Therein, I suggest, lies a great reversal, and an even greater tragedy.

The most significant contribution to the universal Church of pre-conciliar liberal Catholicism in America was the development of a Catholic theory of religious freedom — which led, in due course, to Vatican II’s epic Declaration on Religious Freedom, to the post-conciliar Church’s history-changing defense of human rights, and to the Church’s crucial role in democratic transitions around the world. This achievement, in which the debates on religious freedom at Vatican II were pivotal, unfolded in close collaboration with the U.S. bishops. It was Cardinal Francis Spellman of New York, for instance, who brought Jesus Father John Courtney Murray to the council, where Murray became one of the intellectual architects of the Declaration on Religious Freedom. And it was Murray who, with the U.S. bishops and others, worked the council process so that it became clear to a critical mass of the world’s bishops that religious freedom was indeed congruent with what Cardinal George called “the Catholic and apostolic faith, and that sees the controversy as a test of the Catholic legacy in America.”

That liberal Catholicism of the 2012 diaspora refuse to concede the threat to religious freedom, and that they have given political cover to a gross infringement on religious freedom by a federal government, is a grave breach of ecclesial communion in itself. It also represents a tragic betrayal of the best in the liberal Catholic heritage in the U.S., even as it illustrates the utter incoherence into which post-conciliar liberal Catholicism in America has tragically fallen.

Revolution was in full swing. In the context of a succinct but profound theology of spousal love and responsible parenthood, it reaffirmed the moral norm prohibiting contraception and instead promoted natural methods of fertility regulation as the path to happiness and holiness in marriage.

Blessed John Paul II reaffirmed the Church’s teaching and deepened her understanding of this matter through his beautiful appreciation of the body, which he developed largely as a defense of the moral norm prohibiting contraception.

God calls married couples to a “generous and responsible openness to life,” the Holy Father said. While Sacred Scripture and the Church have always seen in large families a sign of God’s blessing and the parents’ generosity, married couples may legitimately decide to postpone another pregnancy or to limit their family size for proportionately serious reasons — if that is what they discern, in dialogue with God and with each other, what they consider good at a particular point in their marriage.

However, the means we choose to accomplish a good end matter enormously from a moral point of view. If I want to raise money to send to starving children in Africa, I can, for example, hold a bake sale or rob a bank. To understand why natural methods of fertility regulation are an acceptable means of avoiding pregnancy while contraception and sterilization are not, we have to begin with the “big picture” from a theological point of view, to go back to the truth that is the foundation of our Christian faith: God is love. He is not just some “higher power” out there, or an impersonal cosmic life force. God is a communion of persons who lives in Himself a mystery of love as Father, Son and Spirit. In this communion of persons, God is the Lover, God the Son is the Beloved, and the Love between them is so perfect, so real, that it is actually another person — the Holy Spirit.

This is a profound mystery that we will never fully grasp this side of eternity, but it is the essential starting point for understanding the Christian vision. Unless we understand who God is, we will never understand who we are to be, because we are created in the image and likeness of God. This means that both man and woman have given a rational mind and a free will capable of knowing what is good and choosing it. But what is more, it means that man and woman also, in a sense, become the image of God by living with, and even more deeply, for one another in the vocation of marriage.

Sexual intercourse is intended by God to be the most intimate sign of the mutual gift of self, which a man and woman make to one another in marriage. It is designed to be a dialogue in which a husband and wife “say” to each other through the language of the body what they said aloud publicly on the altar on their wedding day: I accept you completely as the gift that God created you to be, and I give myself to you completely in return. And this mutual gift of self that is expressed in sexual union is not meant to end with the couple, but rather, makes them capable of the greatest possible gift: cooperating with God in giving life to a new human person.

The communion of love between a man and woman in marriage is meant to mirror the love that exists between the Father and the Son, a love which is literally “personified” in the Holy Spirit. In a similar way, through the privilege of procreation, God enables the love between a husband and wife to become “personified” in the gift of their child, who is literally the two of them in one flesh, a living reflection of their love and a permanent sign of their unity.

And what is more, this new human being bears not only the image and likeness of his or her parents, but above all, the very image and likeness of God.

MISHAWAKA — The traditional matchup between the Catholic Youth Organization from Fort Wayne and the Inter-City Catholic League, pitted the best of the season's stars as they squared off at Marian High School Sunday afternoon.

The day's first game showcased the Eagles South Bend St. Joseph playing host to the St. Therese Crusaders. The two teams jabbled and countered taking the other's best shot in the first rounds with the slight advantage going to the Crusaders, 18-17.

A big defensive third quarter by the visiting red clad eagles extended their six-point lead to eight over the Eagles. St. Joseph would turn up the pressure in the fourth by applying a full court defense that would edge them close, but not close enough.

The Crusaders' Brandon Doss went five for six from the charity stripe to add to his point total of 22, denying a comeback by the Eagles despite 23 from John Byzewski. The final score was 41-35.

In the second contest of the afternoon, St. Joseph-Hessen Cassel seemed as though they were punching their semiannual ticket to play their foes from St. Joseph County. The Squires had made trips in 2008 and 2010.

The Crusaders of Holy Cross were competing in their second invitational in a row and had surged late in the 2012 campaign.

Both teams battled early, but the second quarter belonged to the Squires' lengthy swingman Maril Saalfrank as he netted 10 in the quarter giving the St. Joseph squad a 21-20 lead at intermission.

Holy Cross star Mark Madden was not to be outdone. As the second half began so did the heat of the Crusaders' press and the scoring of the rangy playmaker.

Madden could do no wrong as he added 15 in the second half to his 13 from the first two quarters giving him 28 and the Crusaders a come from behind 41-31 victory. Jack Johnson netted 12 for the Squires in the loss.

Finally, the top-matched tournament champ from both leagues — the Panthers of St. Vincent and the host Saints of Mishawaka Catholic — met for a showdown.

The Panthers just completed winning not only the ICCL basketball championship but adorned the football crown as well and they started play by running away with a 10-0 lead over the jet lagged Fort Wayne victors. The Panthers would get their sea legs about them and make a run of their own and taking the lead by the narrowest of margins at half time, 18-17.

Things wouldn't get much better for the Saints as Jake Graham and his teammates stretched the lead to six, 30-24, after three.

Jitters from the free throw line and constant pressure from the Panthers spelled a long afternoon for the Saints as they shot 23 percent from the charity stripe going 6-26 and succumbing, 40-25, to St. Vincent.

Graham knocked down 17 in the victory and Jake Whiffield scored 10 in the loss.

Coaches Jeff Graham and D.J. Wagner were pleased with their team's resiliency and execution down the stretch. The Panthers had to win games on three successive days (43-19 over rival St. Charles on Friday and 42-37 over St. Jude Saturday in the CYO title game before Sunday's diocesan championship).

Jake Graham paced the Panthers in all three games with 48 total points, followed by Freimuth's 25 points and 15 rebounds, cumulatively.

In the CYO championship contest St. Vincent needed a strong fourth quarter to come from behind to knock off the Eagles of St. Jude at St. Charles. Freimuth scored six points and Jake Graham added five points in the decisive fourth quarter, as St. Vincent outscored St. Jude, 15-9, in the final stanza.

With that victory, the Panthers avenged their lone CYO loss over the past four seasons, which culminated in four championships in as many years.

Great teams, chants, cheers forever beckon as Saint Joseph's Alumni Gym saw its last game played.

"Over the years the gym has hosted the games of our freshmen, junior varsity and varsity programs in both girls and boys basketball as well as volleyball and wrestling." Gohlke said, and added, tongue in cheek, "We invited everyone but the fire marshal to the game."

“Our teams practice in here from 6 a.m. until 9:30 p.m. on some days. The place is home to Inter-City Catholic League Games. We have had graduations and held our school Masses here,” commented Richter.

"Personally, my heart was heavy as school chaplains Father Walter Bly, Father Camillo Tirabassi, Msgr. Michael Heinz and others had done for more than 60 years."

"I believe its so fitting that the last game played here will match the two Catholic Schools from the west end of the diocese that share the common mission in educating their students in heart and mind," explained Richter. "What an atmosphere to celebrate and pay tribute to the multitude of student athletes that have competed in Alumni Gym."

"Names like Abernethy, Lechlitner, Hunt, Holman, Smallbone, Dockery, Litka, Stanley and Quinn spent endless hours toiling on the unforgiving hardwood firmly constructed on concrete perfection of their crafts and marveling the faithful.

"What a night for our athletic programs; we honor our current seniors, our 1955 team will be recognized and then all of the alumni present will be called on to the floor for one last time," stated Eric Gohlke, athletic director. "Tickets to the game were sold out a week prior to tip off and we made a concerted effort to accommodate as many people as possible."

SAINT MARY-OF-THE-WOODS — St. Mother Theodore Guérin, foundress of the Sisters of Providence of Saint Mary-of-the-Woods, Ind., will be featured in an upcoming documentary on CNN.

The international television network will examine the process of becoming a saint in the Roman Catholic Church. It is scheduled to be televised on Sunday, March 4, at 8 p.m., 10 p.m. and 2 a.m. (EST).

CNN producer Jen Christensen led the reporting team from CNN’s Special Investigations and Documentary Unit. She made three trips to Saint Mary-of-the-Woods with photojournalists to do research and record the video. Correspondent Drew Griffin, an Emmy Award winner, did an extensive interview with Sister Marie Kevin Tighe, who served as vice postulator and promoter of the Cause for St. Mother Theodore Guérin.

“This is heaven on earth. I’ve never been to such a beautiful place, not just the land, but the spirit here is unlike any place I’ve ever been,” Christensen said as she was wrapping up her work on recent visit to Saint Mary-of-the-Woods. “I’ve been very fortunate to travel the world and to see the best and the worst of humanity. But this is singular. It makes me emotional. That’s how much I really love it here.”

Christensen also talked about getting to know St. Mother Theodore from a deeper perspective.

“I am struck by the determination that had to go into this cause. It’s clear to me that this woman was a saint without the Vatican’s blessing. I am so impressed with the dogged determination with the people here who want the rest of the world to know her story,” she said. “I think the sisters here have the secret to life, the secret to happiness. I think Mother Guérin set the tone for that in all of the right ways.”

St. Mother Theodore Guérin and five companion sisters came to the United States from France in 1840, arriving first in southern Indiana and traveling through Vincennes and the dense forest terrain in western Indiana to Saint Mary-of-the-Woods.

Within a year, St. Mother Theodore opened an academy, now known as Saint Mary-of-the-Woods College, which is the oldest Catholic college for women in the United States. Pope Benedict XVI canonized St. Mother Theodore on Oct. 15, 2006, in Rome.

Father Andrew Rudzinski, left, greets the 1,400 men from across the diocese at the second Rekindle the Fire Diocesan Men’s Conference on Feb. 25.

Bishop Rhoades celebrates Mass at Men’s Conference

n his homily at the Mass, which concluded the men’s conference, Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades spoke of how Jesus associated Himself with sinners, first by undergoing a baptism. He didn’t need — John’s baptism of repentance. The Spirit descended on Jesus as a dove, who anointed Him and then drove Him to the desert. Jesus assumed our human nature, Bishop Rhoades said. “So we understand why the Spirit drove Jesus into the desert right after He was baptized by John. He went there to be tempted, to be put to the test, by Satan (which means the ‘Adversary’). This was part of His assuming our human nature — experiencing temptation to sin. Also, His mission was precisely this: to overcome sin, to conquer Satan, to liberate us from evil. So the Spirit drove Jesus out into the desert.” Jesus rebuffed the devil’s temptation, determined to do the Father’s will.

“Notice that Jesus did not overcome the temptations of the devil with weapons of His divine power,” Bishop Rhoades noted. “In His human nature, Jesus did battle with Satan.”

Bishop Rhoades told those gathered for the Mass, “My brothers in Christ, spiritual battle is an essential part of our life in Christ. As Catholics, as disciples of Jesus Christ, we are engaged in a battle, as Jesus was, against the powers of evil. First, the battleground is in our own souls where we are to struggle against our own tendencies to sin (what St. Paul calls ‘the flesh’), concupiscence. This spiritual combat involves the rejection of Satan and all his works and all his empty promises and glamorous seductions.”

He said, “We need the power of Christ to fight the good fight. We need His grace, sanctifying and actual.”

Bishop Rhoades said, “It is through the Church, the body of Christ, and her sacraments that we receive salvation and new life. Throughout the storms of history, the Church has survived. It is unsinkable, as Christ promised St. Peter, when He told him that He was to be the rock upon which He would build His Church and against which the gates of hell would never prevail.”

Bishop Rhoades mentioned it is good to remember this while the Church fights for religious liberty and living in a culture that has grown hostile to the Church and to the faith.

“In our individual lives, our family lives, our work lives and our community lives we can encounter various storms,” Bishop Rhoades said. “We face challenges and difficulties. We face trials and temptations to sin, like Jesus faced and overcame in the desert. But in the Church, where He is with us always with His love and grace.”

Life of no regrets

Speaker Robert Rogers, a member of St. Vincent de Paul Parish in Fort Wayne, experienced the loss of his wife and four children in a flash flood in Kansas in 2003. Rogers’ message to the men was to “live a life of no regrets” and offered seven steps in which he told the story of his family, his loss, and how his faith supports him.

He encouraged the men to forgive others repeatedly. He said the men should love their spouse sacrificially as Jesus loves the Church. He gave His life for her.

He encouraged the men to love their family intentionally, to love their children “with all you got” and tell them “you love them.” He told fathers to spend time with their children, to sit down and eat together without interference of TV or other electronics. He encouraged dads to pray and read Scripture over their families and to be “the priest of their homes.”

He told fathers, “Don’t live to work; work to live.” He described “rocking chair decisions” as those they won’t regret.

Rogers encouraged the men to “trust God absolutely,” to “obey God unconditionally,” to “worship God wholeheartedly” and to “know God personally.”

Outburst of grace

Tim Staples, keynote speaker of the day, compared the outburst of grace Jesus received while praying in the Garden of Gethsemane to the outburst of grace bestowed on couples as they ratify their marriage vows.

“In marriage we are given opportunities every day to renew the ratification of the covenant,” Staples said.

To renew this ratification of vows, Staples and his wife challenged one another by finding “ways every day to say ‘not my will, but thy will be done.’”

Jesus lived His life for others, noted the Catholic Answers apostle from El Cajon, Calif.

Staples acknowledged that if husbands and wives do this, there will be an explosion of grace in their families.

“It will change our lives, our families, our children,” Staples said.

He said the essence of our spiritual lives is “to allow Christ to live in us and through us, through our cooperation with His grace. His life is lived in us and through us. We are called to take up our crosses daily. ... Jesus says it’s every day. This is our reality. This is our lives as Catholics.”

“God is very intolerant of sin,” Father Engo said. “He hates sin so much that He sent His only begotten Son to give His life as a ransom for us that we might be set free. That’s how intolerant Our Lord is of sin.”

Father Engo spoke of how every relationship has rules. And following theChurch’s rules, he said, are how we reverence God, one another, ourselves and our marriages.

“We must be men of prayer. We must be men of penance,” Father Engo said. “Men, I beg you to defend your household by bringing your family to prayer. ... You must guard your family from what is happening in this world.”

“Be men of virtue, men of faith, men of hope, men of charity, justice, temperance, fortitude,” he emphasized.
