Whole Church called to enter conclave in prayer, archbishop says

BY CINDY WOODEN

VATICAN CITY (CNS) -- Although there will only be 115 cardinals in the Sistine Chapel voting for a pope, the whole Church joins them in prayer and expectation, said the archbishop who spearheaded the design of the conclave rites and prayers.

Archbishop Piero Marini, currently president of the Pontifical Committee for International Eucharistic Congresses, was master of ceremonies for Blessed John Paul II and coordinated the development of the prayers and Masses to guide the cardinals entering the conclave March 12.

"The spirit of expectation is part of this period" in the life of the Church, Archbishop Marini told reporters March 9 during a media briefing organized by the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops at the Pontifical North American College.

The priests of the diocese are continuing to promote the sacrament of Reconciliation during Lent.

"I am including Reconciliation themes in homilies all this Lent," Father Tim Wrozek, pastor of St. Joseph Parish, Fort Wayne, said. "I have made reference to the bishop’s push to have people return to the confessional more often during those homilies.

I have hit hard on the aspects of sinfulness and our need and reception of God’s love and mercy in reconciliation with Him.”

St. Joseph Parish planned a joint Reconciliation service with St. Elizabeth Ann Seton Parish in Fort Wayne this Lent.

"I have increased the hours on Saturday for Confessions at St. Joseph," Father Wrozek said.

"Many extra times have been posted for individual Confession as well as parish penance services," Father Sullivan of St. Thomas Parish noted. "We have addressed this sacrament in our homilies.

At the cathedral, Reconciliation is promoted “by sharing the numerous reminders that Jesus provides in Scripture, especially the Lenten Mass readings, of a call to repentance and how we deepen a beautiful, loving relationship with God through this sacrament where the sins and fears that bind us are washed away,” Father Freiburger said.

Priests say Light Is On For You was ‘time of grace’

BY TIM JOHNSON

The Light Is On For You is being called a “time of grace.” The diocesan-wide event March 6 opened all parishes from 6 to 8 p.m. for the sacrament of Reconciliation and prayer.

Despite 10 inches of snow that fell in Fort Wayne and parts of the diocese on Tuesday and early Wednesday morning, parishes plowed their lots and cleared the sidewalks to welcome the penitents.

At St. Michael Parish in Plymouth Father William Kummer told Today’s Catholic they had many people in the parish church for both hours, and some stayed to pray until about 8:15 p.m.

“For me personally, it was a great time to be a priest,” Father Kummer said as he welcomed penitents that evening. He was pleased at the numbers of young people who were present that evening.

Father Jason Freiburger, vice-chancellor and a priest in residence at the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception said, “The Light Is On For You was very well received as five priests heard Confessions at the cathedral and were kept busy for much of the time.”

Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades was one of the priests who helped with the Confessions at the cathedral.

“I do not believe weather played too much of a factor,” Father Freiburger noted. “Those who were seeking the grace of the sacrament and to be reconciled in their relationship with God were not deterred by the bad weather.”

Father Bill Sullivan, pastor of St. Thomas the Apostle Parish in Elkhart, said, “Father Len Banas and I were present in our respective Reconciliation rooms from 6 to 8 p.m. When we spoke with one another at the end, his words said it all — ‘It was a time of grace.’”

The priests of the diocese are continuing to promote the sacrament of Reconciliation during Lent.

“I am including Reconciliation themes in homilies all this Lent,” Father Tim Wrozek,

Cardinals end pre-conclave meetings, hear report on Vatican bank

BY CINDY WOODEN

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — During their last meeting before entering the conclave to elect a new pope, the world’s cardinals heard a report on the Vatican bank and continuing efforts to comply with international standards to prevent money laundering and the funding of terrorism.

Jesuit Father Federico Lombardi, Vatican spokesman, told reporters that 152 cardinals, including those over 80 years old, were present for the final general congregation meeting March 11.

The presentation on the bank was given by Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone, president of the commission of cardinals overseeing the Institute for the Works of Religion, the formal name of the Vatican bank. Father Lombardi said Cardinal Bertone’s remarks “completed the series of information” about the financial health of the Vatican given to the cardinals who, as a whole, are responsible for running the Church when there is no pope.

Father Lombardi said Cardinal Bertone’s presentation was brief and touched upon the nature of the bank and “the process of joining the international system of controls” to ensure it cannot be used for money laundering or financing terrorism.

However, in December, Italy’s central bank said the Vatican laws were still too weak, and it halted an Italy-based bank’s contract for accepting credit cards at the Vatican. In February, the Vatican found another provider.

Father Lombardi said 27 other cardinals also spoke at the session.

“Naturally, because it was the last meeting, many were about the expectations for the (new) Holy Father, a profile and expectations,” he said.

During the 10 sessions of general congregations, which began March 4, he said, the cardinals listened to 160 presentations. A few cardinals spoke more than once and a few did not have a chance at all, Father Lombardi said.

Cardinal Angelo Sodano, dean of the College of Cardinals who presided over the general congregations, proposed an afternoon meeting so that all the cardinals who had signed up to speak could do so, but “the large majority preferred to conclude” with the morning session.

“The cardinals felt it was time to prepare to move to the Domus Sanctae Marthae,” the Vatican residence where they will be staying, “and to enter the conclave,” Father Lombardi said.

The Vatican spokesman also told journalists that about 90 people who are not cardinals were scheduled to gather in the Pauline Chapel of the Apostolic Palace late March 11 to swear, on penalty of excommunication, to “observe absolute and perpetual secrecy” concerning “all matters directly or indirectly related to the ballots cast and their scrutiny for the election of the Supreme Pontiff.”

The 90 include Archbishop Lorenzo Baldisseri, secretary of the College of Cardinals; Msgr. Guido Marini, master of liturgical ceremonies; sacristans and other liturgical assistants; religious-order priests who will serve as the cardinals’ confessors during the conclave; the doctors and nurses who will help any cardinal needing it; the elevator operators in the Apostolic Palace; the bus drivers who will take cardinals from their residence to the Sistine Chapel; the head of the Swiss Guards and a major from the corps; the director of the Vatican police and the officers who will watch over the cardinals; and the cooks and cleaning crew from the Domus Sanctae Marthae.

Father Lombardi also said that one tiny change had been made to the list of brief events occurring immediately after a candidate receives two-thirds of the votes in the conclave — 77 votes — and is elected pope.

Cardinal Giovanni Battista Re, the top-ranking cardinal elector, will ask the cardinal if he accepts the election and what name he chooses. At that point, the ballots are burned with chemicals to produce white smoke and announce to the world a successful election.

The pope goes into the so-called “Room of Tears” and dresses in a white cassock and the other papal vestments, then there is a brief prayer ceremony in the Sistine Chapel with the cardinal electors.

Cardinal Jean-Louis Tauran, the top-rank- ing cardinal deacon, will go to the balcony of St. Peter’s Basilica and announce the election to the crowds in St. Peter’s Square.

Before stepping out on to the balcony, Father Lombardi said, the new schedule calls for the new pope to stop in the Pauline Chapel of the Apostolic Palace to pray briefly before the Blessed Sacrament.

Then the pope comes out onto the balcony and gives his first blessing “urbi et orbi” (to the city and the world).
Conscience-protection bill for HHS mandate introduced in House

BY MARK PATTISON

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Three Republican members of the House of Representatives March 5 introduced a bill to protect conscience rights for both workers in the health care industry and for employers in light of the federal mandate requiring employers to cover contraceptives, sterilization and abortion-inducing drugs.

One of the sponsors, Rep. Diane Black, R-Tenn., said it is possible that the bill, the Health Care Conscience Rights Act, could be folded into a continuing resolution being considered by the House to keep the federal government operating beyond March 27.

“Nobody should be asked to make that decision,” said Christine Ketterhagen, a co-owner of Hercules Industries, a heating and air conditioning company her father founded in Denver 50 years ago that now has operations in five states with 320 employees.

“We went to Catholic schools. Our children went to Catholic schools. Our grandchildren go to Catholic schools,” Ketterhagen told Catholic News Service after the news conference. “We’re willing to pay for education,” she added, but not for contraceptives or other mandated health care coverage that goes against their Catholic faith.

“While federal laws are on the books protecting conscience rights in health care, this act would make them more enforceable and offer protections due to all persons. They undermine the meaning and importance of sexual difference,” the five bishops who issued the statement said.

“The bishops said the USCCB mandate requiring employers to cover contraceptives, sterilization and abortion-inducing drugs.

Franciscan Sister Jane Marie Klein, who chairs the board of Franciscan Alliance, and Cathy Cenzen-DeCarlo, a registered nurse, listen to a speaker during a March 5 press conference on Capitol Hill in Washington. Speakers discussed proposed legislation to address religious freedom concerns about the Health and Human Services contraceptive mandate.

abortion. Cathy Cenzen-DeCarlo was an operating room nurse in a New York hospital. “They threatened my job and my nursing license if she did not participate in the abortion, she said.

“I still remember the 22-week-old baby,” Cenzen-DeCarlo said.

other mandates including or long did that, even if her being forced to participate in the abortion was illegal, she had no standing to sue.

Other nurses have been victimized for their beliefs. “Because of my Christian beliefs, I have been laught at, marginalized and had loss of employment,” said Susan Elliott, director of the nursing department at Biola University in California, at the press conference. Rep. John Fleming, R-La., co-sponsor of the bill, told the story at the news conference of nine nurses at an unnamed hospital who had lost their jobs for their refusal to participate in abortions. “The nine nurses got their jobs back,” Fleming said, “but only after help from their unions.”

“I welcome the Health Care Conscience Rights Act and call for its swift passage into law,” said a March 5 statement by Archbishop William E. Lori of Baltimore, chairman of the U.S. bishops’ Ad HoC Committee for Religious Liberty.

“While federal laws are on the books protecting conscience rights in health care, this act would make such protection truly effective,” the five bishops who issued the statement said.

The bishops also expressed their displeasure with the excision of conscience protections for faith-based groups helping trafficking victims, as reauthorization of the Trafficking Victims Protection Act was folded into the bill.

“We strongly supported efforts to include such provisions. Conscience protections are needed in this legislation to ensure that these service providers are not required to violate their long-held values as a condition for serving the needy. Failure to have conscience protection for such service providers undermines a long-held value in our democracy: religious liberty,” the bishops said.

Without these protections, the bill “fails to prevent discrimination against faith-based providers of care, such as the USCCB, which for years has provided exceptional service and care to such victims,” they said. “In the end, the victims of human trafficking are harmed because organizations such as the USCCB are unable to render services that reach them and serve their human needs.”
Good Leaders, Good Shepherds begins curriculum

BY TIM JOHNSON

FORT WAYNE – Twenty-five priests from the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend have embarked on a curriculum for clergy specifically designed to help them overcome today’s challenges of a diminishing number and the more complex circumstances for priestly ministry. The curriculum is called Good Leaders, Good Shepherds and is based on using Christ as the ultimate shepherd and model of leadership.

“The impact will be more holy, healthy and happy shepherds of vibrant parish communities, leading more people to a deeper relationship with Christ,” reports the Catholic Leadership Institute website, www.catholicleaders.org. Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades is a board member of the institute.

“The goal is to minimize the frustration and energy spent on their administrative roles and maximize the joy and time spent on the pastoral duties for which they were uniquely ordained,” the institute says.

“In seminary education there is very little attention given to being effective leaders/managers,” notes Father Jason Freiburger, one of the priests who recently attended the fall and winter sessions.

“The three munera (duties) of the ordained are teaching, sanctifying and governing,” says Father Freiburger, who is the diocesan vice chancellor. “The first two are given adequate focus, while the duty of governing is neglected. Since we are diocesan priests who will very likely oversee the care of a parish at one time or another, any program designed to assist us in this regard is an incredible asset in which we are privileged to partake.”

Father Dave Ruppert, pastor of St. Anthony de Padua Parish in South Bend, says, “I’m basically running a million dollar per year operation for the benefit of some of God’s souls who are, as they say, priceless. I want to do the best job that I can for God and Church.”

Pastoral leadership training gives witness to the good news of the priesthood,” he says. “Good Leaders, Good Shepherds is a world-class curriculum that celebrates the ministerial experience of all participants.”

“In fact,” he notes, “given the demands of ministry and the complexity of running parishes — and for many, multiple parishes — the ability to more effectively lead and invite the leadership of others is paramount to creating and building authentic, vibrant Catholic communities.”

“Five contexts for leadership, and five practices in support of priestly leadership, will be at the core of this ongoing formational opportunity,” Father Dickinson says. “Increased confidence and competence in shepherding the people of God is a desired outcome; it is prayerfully supported and celebrated as well.”

Father Ruppert says of the benefits of the first session: “It takes two points to travel, a beginning and an end. The first session was where we as leaders are coming from in order to understand how to better get to where we are going as a Church.”

Of those benefits, Father Freiburger adds, “Besides the fraternity that was strengthened among the priests who were able to attend, we learned a bit more about our DISC positions, values and personalties and how those interplay with those with whom we work and with whom we interact.”

He plans to take the things he learned from the first session and incorporate them into his ministry.

“We learned to be more open and attentive to the differences that exist in each individual,” Father Freiburger says. “In this way, we can more effectively lead and strengthen others as well in building strong communities of faith not only at our parishes but in the larger community also.”

Father Ruppert says, “The training made us more aware of how people communicate in terms of their personalities and values so that we as leaders can communicate more effectively according to other people’s preferences. We can use this training to communicate the goals and vision of the parish to others.”

As the priests participate in the winter session, Father Ruppert says, “The second session focuses on building relationships with other people which is what communion is all about. It will help us build relationships with individuals as the foundation to building relationships with teams and organizations.”

Father Freiburger says he looks forward to “taking that next step in my own leadership abilities in order to serve God’s people better.”

Bills to protect Hoosier children from sexual exploitation clear first hurdle

INDIANAPOLIS — State lawmakers crack down on individuals who perpetrate sex crimes against Hoosier minors by passing a series of bills to protect children from sexual exploitation. The bills cleared their first hurdle when they were passed by the Indiana Senate unanimously at the close of the first-half of the session. The measures move to the Indiana House for further consideration.

The Indiana Senate voted, 47-0, to pass legislation toughening Indiana’s child seduction law, State Sen. Dennis Maltsis, R-Crawfordsville, author of the child seduction bill, Senate Bill 53 said, “Indiana’s original child seduction law, though well-intentioned, was too limited in its scope and not fully protecting those it was designed to help.”

Maltsis said, “I thank my colleagues for supporting this common-sense initiative to close loopholes in the law and help stop professionals from engaging in inappropriate conduct with young Hoosiers under their care and guardianship.”

The legislation was prompted by a situation involving a 16-year-old adopted boy with emotional issues who was abducted by a 39-year-old woman, also the victim’s counselor from whom he was receiving psychological treatment. The two engaged in sexual activity. Vigo County prosecutor, Terry Modesitt, who testified before a Senate panel in support of the legislation, was approached by the boy’s parents and wanted to press charges against the counselor.

To Modesitt’s and the parents’ surprise, there were no charges to be filed. Indiana’s current child seduction law only makes it illegal for school officials to have relations with minors over the age of 16. In Indiana, the charge of child molestation applies when the child is under the age of 14. Sexual misconduct only applies to teens under 16.

Modesitt told lawmakers the only charge that could be filed was “contributing to the delinquency of a minor” which is a misdemeanor. Modesitt said he was frustrated by the lack of clear laws.

Maltsis’ bill, SB 53, makes it a crime for any adult who has a professional relationship with a 16 or 17-year-old to engage in sexual behavior with the teenager, even though the age of consent in Indiana is 16. The current child seduction law only applies to two specific professions: school officials and military recruiters.

Another measure to protect children from sex crimes expands the human trafficking ban Indiana passed last year. Senate Bill 509, authored by State Sen. John Waterman, R-Shelburne, which passed the Senate, 49-0, builds on the current human trafficking law which was passed last year making it illegal to arrange for a person to participate in any forced sexual act or to arrange for a person younger than 16 to participate in the sexual act.

Waterman said his bill would expand the law’s positive impact by increasing the age of protection from human trafficking to 18. He said this change would better align Indiana’s law with those of other states and the nation.

“Last year’s bill took crucial steps to address human trafficking in our state, and punish the individuals who commit these horrific crimes,” Waterman said. “My bill strengthens the law to provide protection for 16- and 17-year-olds as well, sending a strong message that Indiana will not tolerate this type of activity in our communities.”

Lawmakers placed the human trafficking ban on the fast track toward passage in 2012 since Indianapolis was hosting the Super Bowl and current law didn’t adequately address the problem.

Protecting children from previous sex offenders via the Internet is the aim of another bill passed by the Senate, 49-0. Senate Bill 347, authored by State Sen. Randy Head, R-Logansport, would make it illegal for certain sex offenders whose victims were children to communicate with a minor using a social networking site. It also would increase the penalty for child solicitation to a Class B felony if the person solicits a child online and then travels to meet him or her, or if the person is a repeat offender for child solicitation.

“Communication is changing, and more and more young people are using the Internet to interact with their friends,” Head said. “Because of that, people who intend to harm children are increasingly using social networking to find potential victims and talk to them. Ultimately, this legislation will help keep our kids safe, both on and offline.”

Glenn Tebbe, Indiana Catholic Conference executive director, who serves as the official representative for the Church on public policy matters, said the Church is supportive of legislation to protect children from sexual exploitation. “These bills offer a common-sense approach to protect children from these types of predations,” said Tebbe, “I fully expect the bills to pass the House in the coming weeks and become law this year.”

Founders of SPRED, religious education network for people with developmental disabilities, to receive 2013 Laetare Medal

NOTRE DAME — Sister Susanne Gallagher, Sister Mary Theresa Harrington and Father James H. McCarthy, founders of the Special Religious Education Development Network (SPRED), will receive the 2013 Laetare Medal from the University Commencement ceremony.

The Laetare Medal is so named because the University of Notre Dame’s 1883 Laetare Medal, the oldest and most prestigious honor given to American Catholics, antedates the 11th century. According to its mission statement, SPRED’s work is premised on the Church calendar. “Laetare,” each year in celebration of Laetare Sunday, May 19.

“Sisters Gallagher and Harrington and Father McCarthy have summoned the Church to a crucial and too often overlooked ministry,”’ said Notre Dame’s president, Holy Cross Father John Jenkins, “insisting that a developmental disability neither tempers Christ’s invitation nor restricts one’s right to respond, they have ushered countless people to their rightful place at the Eucharistic table.”

SPRED’s ministry began in 1960, when Father McCarthy, a priest of the Archdiocese of Chicago, began working with parents, special educators and catechist volunteers of several archdiocesan parishes to make Catholic liturgy and catechesis more accessible to children and adult parishioners with developmental disabilities. Sister Harrington, a member of the Society of Helpers, joined him in 1963 to help with catechetical and administrative work, and Sister Gallagher, a member of the Sisters of Providence, joined them in 1967, assisting both with administration and the training of new special catechists.

“Energized by the renewed emphasis on catechesis in the wake of the Second Vatican Council, SPRED’s ministry expanded beyond Chicago in the 1960s and now the 52-year-old network administers faith formation and sacramental initiation programs for people with special needs in 28 Catholic dioceses and 200 parishes nationwide (including in Notre Dame’s own Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend) as well as small faith groups in several other countries including England, Ireland, Scotland, Australia, South Africa, Malta and Mexico.”

According to its mission statement, SPRED’s work is premised on the belief that “the Church, the Sacraments and the Love of God are here for all of us. Every man, woman and child has a right to come into the Church and live its liturgy, experience its rich history and traditions, and feel the presence of God in their lives. It is our obligation as Christians to help as we can to make that right a reality for those with physical, mental, emotional and intellectual challenges.”

The Laetare Medal is so named because the recipient is nominated each year in celebration of Laetare Sunday, the fourth Sunday in Lent on the Church calendar. “Laetare,” the Latin word for “rejoice,” is the first word in the entrance antiphon of the Mass of that Sunday, which ritually anticipates the celebration of Easter. The medal bears the Latin inscription, “Magna est veritas et praevalebit” (“Truth is mighty, and it shall prevail”).

Established at Notre Dame in 1883, the Laetare Medal was conceived as an American counterpart of the Golden Rose, a papal honor which antedates the 11th century. The medal has been awarded annually at Notre Dame to a Catholic “whose genius has enabled the arts and sciences, illustrated the ideals of the Church and enriched the heritage of humanity.”

Jim Cavnar looked at the two photographs on this desk and found it hard to believe they were taken of the same boy. One child is gaunt, glassy-eyed and limping in the arms of a caretaker. The other boy is healthy, alert and focused on play.

How could this possibly be the same child — Javier from Honduras?

We see before and after photos like this often, but I never cease to be amazed by them. It makes you marvel at the human body’s ability to rebound from trauma. It makes you realize that even someone who appears to be at death’s door can be rescued and revitalized,” explained Jim Cavnar, president of Cross Catholic Outreach. “When Javier was brought in to the Prince of Peace Nutrition Center that Cross Catholic Outreach supports, he was 10 months old and weighed less than 9 pounds. The doctors didn’t think he would survive through the week, but the staff at Prince of Peace did a marvelous job in nursing him back to health. The before and after pictures were taken only four months apart — you can see the profound difference their care made for yourself.”

As one of America’s leading Catholic relief agencies, Cross Catholic Outreach is literally in the business of creating success stories like this one in developing countries around the globe. Cross Catholic Outreach achieves this goal by enlisting support from U.S. Catholics who share Cavnar’s concern for the poor and his passion for rescuing children from needless suffering and death. It channels its support through Catholic partners already in place overseas — outreaches like the Prince of Peace Nutrition Center that cared for Javier.

“Prince of Peace is a wonderful organization with a committed staff, but their programs would be paralyzed without a regular stock of food, medicines and other supplies. They couldn’t properly feed or care for the children,” Cavnar explained. “Providing those resources is Cross Catholic Outreach’s role. Our support helps them obtain the food and other supplies they need to treat children like Javier. It’s all about teamwork. The churches overseas provide the daily services, and Cross Catholic Outreach and its donors help provide the material resources needed for their outreaches.”

Cavnar is clearly grateful to the American Catholics who have chosen to support the Cross Catholic Outreach’s work. He emphasizes them often, pointing out that they are the real key to every success story.

“Dramatic turn-arounds like Javier’s are only possible because people step forward and offer a helping hand. The donor is the catalyst or trigger. Their financial support is critical in turning a tragic ‘before’ into a triumphant ‘after’ for a child like Javier. So I don’t take their role lightly. I give the credit where the credit is due — to those who contribute to make success stories like this possible,” Cavnar said. “In the simplest terms, without the donor there wouldn’t be a ‘before and after’ story at all. Javier wouldn’t have recovered. He wouldn’t have survived.”

Acc ording to Cavnar, the scope of work being funded by American Catholics has been growing in recent years. As more and more people learn about Cross Catholic Outreach in their local parish or through stories in Catholic newspapers, they add their support, allowing Cross Catholic Outreach to further expand its outreach into new countries, touching more lives.

“With more support from American Catholics, we can take this outreach to whole new levels,” Cavnar said. “When a parish working in the trenches overseas wants to launch a new feeding center, we can partner with them and supply the food. When a poor rural village is facing problems with an unsafe water source, we can dig the well or tap the spring to bring relief. Whether the need is for a clinic to treat the poor or for a school to serve an impoverished community, we can be there to help.

“Whatever their need, Cross Catholic Outreach has the potential to turn a tragic situation into something wonderful,” he added. “We offer American Catholics the same opportunity. It’s a chance to do something meaningful and profound in God’s name and for His glory.”

Cross Catholic Now Endorsed by More Than 60 Bishops, Archbishops

As Cross Catholic Outreach continues its range of relief work to help the poor overseas, its efforts are being recognized by a growing number of Catholic leaders in the U.S.

“We’ve received an impressive number of endorsements from American Bishops and Archbishops — more than 60 Catholic leaders at last count,” explained Jim Cavnar, president of Cross Catholic Outreach (CCO). “They’re impressed by the fact that we’ve done outreaches in more than 40 countries and that we undertake a variety of projects; everything from feeding the hungry and housing the homeless to supplying safe water and supporting educational opportunities for the poorest of the poor.”

Archbishop Robert Carlson of St. Louis sent one of the more recent letters of encouragement, writing: “It is my hope that this ministry will continue to flourish and reach as many people as possible. I will inform the priests of the Archdiocese of St. Louis of the important work that Cross Catholic Outreach does and elicit their prayerful and financial support for the service you provide to the less fortunate around the world.”

In addition to praising the work CCO accomplishes, many of the Bishops and Archbishops are also impressed by the unique collaborative relationship Cross Catholic Outreach has with the Pontifical Council Cor Unum in Rome. This allows the charity to participate in the mercy ministries of the Holy Father himself. In his praise of CCO, Archbishop Dennis Schnurr of Cincinnati underscored this unique connection.

“Cross Catholic Outreach’s close collaboration with the Pontifical Council Cor Unum is a source of encouragement,” the Archbishop said. “The Holy See has unique knowledge of local situations throughout the world through its papal representatives in nearly two hundred countries and through its communications with Bishops and others who care for the poor and needy in every corner of the world.”

CCO president, Jim Cavnar, explained the significance of this connection.

“Our collaboration with Cor Unum allows us to fund outreaches in virtually any area of the world and we have used that method in special cases — to help the victims of natural disasters, for example,” he said. “It only represents a small part of our overall ministry, but it can be a very important benefit in those situations.”
U.S. Catholics “Spark A Miracle” — Ultimately Blessing Families On Other Side Of The Globe

In the stifling heat of a Mozambique summer dawn, the shrill cry of a hungry baby startles the young man from his dreamless sleep. It is still dark outside the flimsy hut, and his body screams for more sleep. But there are hungry children who will soon awaken, and he needs to prepare what little food is available. Suppressing the momentary temptation to escape from the overwhelming responsibility of this new day, he takes the baby a rusty cup half-filled with the last of the milk.

He still grieves the loss of the baby’s mother, and wishes she were here to help him. It isn’t a selfish wish. At age 14, Camal Tila only wants what any young teenager in Mozambique would crave—a few less responsibilities, more time with his friends in the village and a decent education, the starting point for greater opportunities in his life. He wasn’t yet ready for this role of head of household to his younger siblings.

Camal Tila, whose own father, mother and three younger siblings all died of AIDS within the last six years, now cares for 12 younger siblings and child relatives, including his baby sister. Hardly beyond childhood himself, Camal must now struggle to keep the family intact and alive. His dreams of independence and a family of his own fade with each passing day, leaving him to pray for a miracle and some small beacon of hope.

“Tragically, Camal’s heartbreaking story is repeated across much of Africa, where AIDS is decimating the population in many countries — and we are determined to help as many of these poor orphans as possible,” explained Jim Cavnar, president of Cross Catholic Outreach, one of the nation’s leading relief ministries to the poor. “Thankfully, it’s possible for us to make a difference. Serving as a tool in God’s hands, we can help answer the prayers of these children — spark a miracle, if you will, on their behalf.”

As Cavnar explains it, the “miracle” came to the Tila family through the generosity of American Catholics who responded to Cross Catholic Outreach’s plea for help in diocesan newspapers and on Catholic radio.

“We explained the plight of the children and the contributions we received enabled us to partner with a Catholic orphan-care ministry in Mozambique called Reencontro. Among other things, the support allowed us to build a safe, concrete block house for Camal and his family, and to supply food and medical care to meet their basic human needs,” Cavnar said. “Providing mentoring and building simple houses to keep orphan families together is just one of several creative solutions that Reencontro has employed since its inception, when a devout Catholic woman, Olinda Mugabe, was compelled by a love of Christ to do what she could for the orphans in Mozambique. She and her group are a treasure and a blessing to the poor, and it’s our privilege to help them with their outreach.”

Describing the support provided by Cross Catholic Outreach as “help” is an understatement. When the ministry first encountered Reencontro, it served 600 to 700 children. The support from Cross Catholic Outreach has allowed the group to expand its capacity significantly in a few short years—it now is a life-line to more than 7,000 children like Camal. For this, Cavnar again credits the many American Catholics who make up the Cross Catholic Outreach family of benefactors.

“You could say that Cross Catholic Outreach is one of God’s funnels. He pours resources through us to help the poorest and neediest people on earth. The orphan crisis in Africa staggers our imagination and at times almost defies belief. But we remember that this is God’s work and we are simply His channel. So we continue to do everything we can with the gifts God gives us,” he says. “Seeing things this way also helps us to keep the correct perspective on our work. Helping just one orphan family may not seem like a world-changing accomplishment to a skeptic...but we know Camal Tila and his brothers and sisters. We know that the help they received changed their world forever, and we can celebrate that human triumph.”

Ultimately, the goals of Cross Catholic Outreach are to further expand its outreach to AIDS orphans through other partnering ministries and to avoid putting these children in institutions if at all possible. As Cavnar explains, “keeping orphans in their own culture and in the homes of relatives or family friends is really the best option, and most Catholic ministries are committed to that strategy. That’s why we give a priority to supporting organizations that integrate orphaned children into existing families within their own villages or districts.”

The problem is that most poor African families are already struggling under the weight of poverty and find it difficult to add one more mouth to feed, let alone two or three. If they hesitate to accept another child, it isn’t because they are unwilling—they are simply unable to make ends meet on their already limited resources.

One director of a program in Zambia described how ministries found a solution: “We have made the care of orphans a partnership in which we all share the responsibility and burden. We assure the families that if they will provide basic shelter, we will provide what they can’t give the children: the extra food, the access to health care, additional clothing and fees and supplies needed to provide an education.”

Because the costs are shared, the amount needed to provide food, clothing, health care, education or other services is surprisingly small—just $68 per child per year!

“It is amazing what can be done for so little. Most people are also shocked to learn how little it can cost to supply a house and keep a family of orphans together. It’s just $3,500 to $5,000 to build a multi-room, cement-block house,” Cavnar said. “This is another value to working through partnering African ministries run predominately by volunteers. It allows you to stretch donated dollars and have a bigger impact in the lives of the poor.”

“I hope every American Catholic who has supported us in this outreach will join me today in celebrating Camal’s new home and the hope it represents for that family of orphans. I hope they will see it for what it was—an act of God’s mercy made possible by God’s faithful people. And I hope they will see it as one significant step in a greater, more wide-reaching plan,” he added. “We celebrate one victory, knowing that scores of other children have yet to be helped. And we can do that because we have no doubt that God will touch other hearts to respond generously, answering the prayers of other children like Camal. There is no more compassionate body of believers than the Catholic Church, and I am confident my Catholic brothers and sisters in the U.S. will continue to respond where the needs are greatest. Jesus came to save the whole world, one lost soul at a time. He is our example, so we will never lose heart.”

NOTRE DAME — Cardinal Timothy Dolan, archbishop of New York and president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, will be the principal speaker and the recipient of an honorary degree at the University of Notre Dame’s 168th Commencement Ceremony on May 19.

“Over the past several years, I have had the honor and pleasure of getting to know Cardinal Dolan,” said Holy Cross Father John I. Jenkins, Notre Dame’s president. “He is a man of great intelligence and personal grace, and a dedicated shepherd of the Church. We were pleased to have him here in 2011 to give the inaugural lecture for the Notre Dame Project on Human Dignity, and we are grateful that he has accepted our invitation to join us in celebrating the achievements of our students and to provide them with words of wisdom as they set out into the world.”

Cardinal Dolan was named archbishop of New York by Pope Benedict XVI on Feb. 23, 2009, after serving for the previous seven years as archbishop of Milwaukee. He was elected president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops on Nov. 16, 2010. Pope Benedict named him to cardinal on Jan. 6, 2012. Born Feb. 6, 1950, Cardinal Dolan began his high school seminary education in 1964 at St. Louis Preparatory Seminary South in the St. Louis suburb of Shrewsbury, Mo. His seminary foundation continued at Cardinal Glennon College, where he earned a bachelor’s degree in philosophy. He then completed his priestly formation at the Pontifical North American College in Rome where he earned a license in sacred theology at the Pontifical University of St. Thomas.

Cardinal Dolan was ordained to the priesthood on June 19, 1976. He then served as associate pastor at Immacolata Parish in Richmond Heights, Mo., until 1979 when he began studies for a doctorate in American Church history at The Catholic University of America. His doctoral dissertation is on the life and ministry of the late Archbishop Edwin O’Hara, a founder of the Catholic Biblical Association.

On his return to St. Louis, Cardinal Dolan served in parish ministry from 1983 to 1987, during which time he also was liaison for the late Archbishop John L. May in the restructuring of the college’s theology programs of the archdiocesan seminary system.

In 1987, Cardinal Dolan was appointed to a five-year term as secretary to the Apostolic Nunciature in Washington, D.C. When he returned to St. Louis in 1992, he was appointed vice rector of Kenrick-Glennon Seminary, serving also as director of spiritual formation and professor of church history. He also was appointed to a five-year term as professor of sociology at Saint Louis University.

In 1994, he was appointed rector of the Pontifical North American College in Rome where he served until June 2001. While in Rome, he also served as a visiting professor of Church history at the Pontifical Gregorian University and as a faculty member in the Department of Ecumenical Theology at the Pontifical University of St. Thomas Aquinas. His work in the area of seminary education has influenced the life and ministry of a great number of priests of the new millennium.

On June 19, 2001 — the 25th anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood — then Father Dolan was named the auxiliary bishop of St. Louis by Pope John Paul II.

Cardinal Dolan served as chairman of Catholic Relief Services from January 2009 to November 2010. He currently is a member of the board of trustees of The Catholic University of America and a member of the Pontifical Council for Promoting New Evangelization and the Pontifical Council for Social Communications.

The 2013 University Commencement Ceremony will take place in Notre Dame Stadium beginning at 9 a.m.

Gretchen Crowe named editor of OSV Newsweekly

HUNTINGTON (CNS) — Gretchen Crowe has been named the new editor of OSV Newsweekly, the nation’s largest national Catholic weekly newspaper.

Greg Erlandson, president and publisher of Our Sunday Visitor Publishing, announced the appointment. He called Crowe “a bright light in Catholic journalism” who is perfectly suited to the challenges of Catholic publishing in the 21st century.

“Gretchen has the kind of background we value so much,” Erlandson said in a Feb. 26 statement. “She has been trained in the craft of journalism at one of the top journalism schools in the country. She has grass-roots experience in evangelization and ministry, has worked at one of the best newspapers in the country, and has a passion for social media and the Internet.”

“She appreciates the big picture and the local details,” he added.

Crowe was most recently senior staff writer and photographer at the Arlington Catholic Herald, newspaper of the Diocese of Arlington, Va., where she served for almost nine years. She has won numerous awards for writing and photography, including a first-place award from the Catholic Press Association last year for reporting on World Youth Day.

She succeeds John Norton, who last September left the Catholic press to take a management job in the music industry in Southern California. Sarah Hayes, now OSV Newsweekly’s executive editor, served as interim editor.

Crowe has wide experience in social media and the Internet. She helped redesign the Arlington Catholic Herald’s print edition and website, and helped develop its social media presence.

Crowe graduated with a bachelor’s degree in journalism and mass communication from the University of Notre Dame, where she studied at Chapel Hill, with a minor in French. While at college, Crowe was active in its Newman Center, overseeing liturgy, retreats and faith formation. After graduation, she spent a year of service working in the campus ministry program at Duke University.

“I’m so thrilled to have the opportunity to be a part of the Our Sunday Visitor team,” Crowe said in a statement. “OSV Newsweekly has a rich history of supporting tradition and excellence in serving the church. I look forward to the challenge of maintaining that excellence in an increasingly digital and diverse world.”
Facebook page encourages prayer, sacrifice for life, marriage, religious liberty

WASHINGTON — In this Year of Faith, join the bishops and Catholics throughout the United States in praying for the renewal of a culture of life and marriage and for protection of religious liberty and conscience rights.

January 31, 2013 marks the 40th anniversary of Roe v. Wade; June 2013 could see important decisions on marriage by the Supreme Court; and August 1, 2013 is the date when the Department of Health and Human Services says many religious organizations must comply with its contraceptive/sterilization mandate.

All three of these events merit focused prayer and sacrifice.

In particular, all are encouraged to prepare prayerfully for the second annual Fortnight for Freedom, to be held June 21 to July 4, 2013. (The Call to Prayer will continue until the Solemnity of Our Lord Jesus Christ, King of the Universe, Nov. 24, 2013).

There are five ways to participate:

• Host or attend a Holy Hour on the last Sunday of each month
• Pray the rosary every day
• Fast and abstain from meat on Fridays
• Join the pledge at www.usccb.org/fast, and sign up for weekly intentions by email (www.usccb.org/fast) or by text message by texting “FAST” to 99000.

Quid est in nomine? Latin name is first clue to new pope’s identity

BY CINDY WOODEN

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The first clue to the identity of the new pope will be the announcement of his first name — in Latin, in the accusative case.

If he is not the one chosen, French Cardinal Jean-Louis Tauran, the top-ranked cardinal-deacon, will say, in Latin, “I announce to you a great joy. We have a pope: His most Eminent and Reverend Lordship, Lord...” followed by the Latin version of the chosen cardinal’s first name.

If Cardinal Tauran says, “Lord Didileon,” everyone would know the new pope was Brazilian Cardinal Odilo Scherer of Sao Paulo. They would not have to wait for Cardinal Tauran to announce the new pope’s last name.

But if he says “Lord Angelum,” it would not necessarily mean the new pope was the media-touted Italian Cardinal Angelo Scola of Milan; there are three other Italian cardinals also named Angelo.

If the cardinal says “Iosephum” (Joseph), things would be much more complicated. Fifteen cardinals’ names are variations of Iosephum (Joseph), five are named Francisca (Francis) and five have names beginning Antonium (Anthony).

Only two are named after the apostle Peter, Petrum, and three after the apostle Paul, Paulum. The 115 cardinals who will enter the Sistine Chapel for the conclava include the cardinals named Georgium or George and three who would be called Carolum, like Blessed John Paul II, the former Karol Wojtyla.

There are limits to translation possibilities. Lithuanian Cardinal Audrius Jozefas Becharam would be called Audrulis and Maronite Patriarch Bechara Rai would be both Bachara or Becharam.

When the Vatican’s Office of Latin Letters is called upon to write a letter in Latin to one of the cardinals, the “Acta Apostolicae Sedis,” the book of official acts of the Holy See, is the go-to place for which version of their name to use. The volumes for 1999 through the end of 2012 are online on the Vatican website.

Apparently, though, it is not always that easy. Indian Cardinal Baselios Cleemis Isaac Thomtukkan, major archbishop of the Syro-Malankara Catholic Church, has been referred to both as Basilios and Basil.

It also is possible that Cardinal Tauran will not use the accusative case when he announces the name. He could say, “Marcus” instead of “Marcius” if the cardinals choose Canadian Cardinal Marc Ouellet, who has been prefect of the Congregation for Bishops.
The shrouded sorrow of miscarriage

Sprung is in the air where I live and there seems to be a rush of new pregnancies among the adult children of many of my friends and coworkers. We have frequently come together to congratulate each other on the new grandchildren to be born who will bring new life to our families, and catch up on how each mom-to-be is faring.

But recently our gathering took a traumatic turn when we learned that one of our friend’s daughter had miscarried just days before. The joy we’ve worn on our sleeves for each new life suddenly dimmed as our hearts were plunged into sadness for the new mom-to-be in her loss.

“How is she?” we all asked. Our friend simply said she was okay physically, but still “kind of stunned.” She observed that with pain medication her daughter was a little calmer now. She seemed “cried out for the moment — like I am,” our friend finally admitted numbly.

I have not experienced a miscarriage, but my mother’s heart tells me this grief is like no other. Frequently in our mourning-avoidant culture supporters might say that we have not physically held the tiny soul that lived such a short life in utero, so there is really nothing to grieve. “It’s no big deal, you can have other babies,” they sometimes add, unaware of the consequences of such a statement.

Those who have experienced this kind of loss know that there is much to grieve.

The infant that grows inside a woman, even without being seen or held, is very real from the moment she discovers she carries this God-given treasure. She bonds with the baby in ways only a mother can, dreaming of a bright future of happy milestones and successes for her charge. As her body changes to accommodate the growth of new life, she plans not only for the physical birth of her little one, but for his or her entire life’s path.

So when her baby dies during a miscarriage, she grieves not only for the loss of her offspring, but for all the future hopes she held in her heart as well. Many young mothers have the compassionate support that allows for public mourning and are able to move through their pain by embracing the hard work of mourning. They may have

Renounce sin and turn to Christ

By no means was all well, however. The land was not overflowing with milk and honey. To the contrary, it was lifeless and absent of yield. This starkness easily prompted people to be cynical and to deny that God cared for the people, the tendency even to say that God did not exist.

With great power and clarity, this section of Isaiah insists that God will make all right. He is almighty. He will not forsake the people. He will cause rivers of life-giving water to flow through the arid land.

For the second reading, the Church presents a passage from the Epistle to the Philippians. The Christians of Philippi had this in common with Christians living in every other major city of the Roman Empire. They were few in number, by comparison, and their devotion to Christ drew them into a lifestyle and way of thinking utterly opposite the culture. Furthermore, hostility, official and unofficial, engulfed them. So, this epistle, as the other epistles, encouraged but also challenged the Christians. It is eloquent in its message, using the imagery of racing. Paul says that he has not yet finished the race, but he has his eyes on one sight alone, namely the finish line. When he crosses this line, in other words when he dies an earthly death, he will have won because he will enter life everlasting.

For its third reading this weekend, the Church gives us a selection from John’s Gospel. John’s Gospel is a literary gem. It tells its version of the life and teaching of Jesus with remarkable brilliance and appeal. Important to this appeal is the Gospel’s clarity and pathos.

Certainly such is the case in this reading. The danger before the woman, and the mercy of God in Christ, are so evident.

By way of explanation, the woman had been caught in the act of adultery. Jewish law and custom were very hard on adulterers, not to victimize women, but rather to secure the racial integrity of the people who were chosen to be God’s special people. If an adulterous woman gave birth to a child, conceived outside her marriage, then fraud would taint the family’s line of descent, and the identity of the people might be in jeopardy. Ultimately, it was a trick. The opponents of Jesus knew that to show mercy to the woman would be in accord with the Lord’s teaching, yet any semblance of downplaying her misconduct would appear to disregard the law of Moses and ancient Jewish custom.

Fearlessly, Jesus came to the woman’s rescue by forgiving her. He also upheld the sinfulness of adultery by admonishing her not to sin again.

Reflection

Next weekend, the Church will observe Palm Sunday. Only two weeks of Lent remain.

The Church urges us that there is still time to repent and to refine our determination to follow Christ. Our own sins haunt us. We know our imperfections quite well. Abandoning them will not be easy. This reading tells us that Christ will forgive all, even terrible sins. He will strengthen us, support us, and protect us if we endeavor not to sin again.

Sin is real. So is divine mercy, God will help us to renounce sin and to turn to Christ. Nothing else matters. We need the Lord. He awaits us.

Gratitude for the outpouring of love

A most sincere thank you to all the priests, people and laity of the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend for the outpouring of love that we have received in the loss of my beloved brother, John. I will never forget the many people who came to pay tribute and thanks.

He loved every part of the diocese. I experienced how that love was returned.

I am grateful to Bishop Rhodes for his sensitive and compassionate presence during my brother’s illness and death. I want to thank Maureen Schott for her extraordinary service to Bishop John. I appreciate the wonderful coverage in Today’s Catholic.

I have lost a wonderful brother, but am comforted by many great memories, so many of which were from times in Indiana.

Blessings to all, Sister Anne D’ArCY, C.S.J.

In communities blessed with healthy sanitation and water delivery systems, a glass of clean water is typically just a short walk away, flowing from a tap or drinking fountain. And while the water running from our faucets is very clean and costs just pennies a serving, we are often tempted to buy it in multiple plastic bottles, which cost much more to produce and often make their way to landfills. This week, fill a reusable bottle with water to carry with you, and place what you could have spent on bottled water in your Rice Bowl.

March 17

The patron of Ireland, this bishop was born in Roman Britain, kidnapped at 16 by Irish raiders and sold into slavery in Ireland. He was a lonely shepherd for six years before escaping and returning home. But his dream of converting the Irish pagans propelled him to priestly studies in Gaul (now France), and about 432 Pope Celestine I consecrated him bishop and sent him to Ireland. For nearly 30 years he preached tirelessly, made countless converts, founded monasteries and established the primatial see at Armagh. Toward the end of his life he made a 40-day retreat in Mayo that gave rise to the famous ongoing Croagh Patrick pilgrimages. Stories of him using the shamrock to explain the Trinity and driving snakes from the island are legend.
Gratitude for meaningful funeral for Bishop D’Arcy

Thank you for all the tributes Today’s Catholic gave to our brother, Bishop John M. D’Arcy. The Father’s love allowed everything that happened from South Bend to Fort Wayne until the committal in the crypt. Thank you for the picture of the football captains who were pallbearers.

The insert booklet was especially poignant for us. One section was devoted to Bishop John who was not present, and the funeral for him was the day before we were supposed to see him. It was like reading a eulogy, although something was missing. The service at the cathedral was a beautiful prayer, seamlessly drawing on the day’s Scripture and the Gospel. Bishop John’s last sermon was on the love for our controversy. And it was wonderful to see so many here who love Bishop John.

Reluctant leaders, divine surprises and a resigning pope

It was 1415,” my friend corrected her husband over a dinner of wings and beer on the evening Bishop John resigned. “You have a knack for this,” I joked.

my friend’s son-in-law, not a scholar, was able to explain what went wrong. “It’s true that there were so many options, but when you sit down and talk with others who have experienced a miscarriage, you realize that you are not alone.”

We are trapped in the misconception that we are alone. We need to talk about our losses, our feelings, and our hopes. We need to know that we are not alone in our grief.

Looking for a way to help others?

If you are interested in helping others who have experienced a miscarriage, there are several organizations that can help. The National Organization for Women (NOW) has a support group for women who have experienced a miscarriage. The organization offers support and resources to help women through their grief.

Three new CYO champions crowned in year-end tournament

BY MICHELLE CASTLEMAN

FORT WAYNE — In its 77th running, three new Catholic Youth Organization (CYO) boys’ champions were crowned in the much-anticipated year-end tournament. This year’s showdowns were once again held at the St. Charles Hession Center on Saturday, Feb. 23.

In the White League battle, St. Vincent topped St. Charles, 45-29, while St. Joseph-Hessen Cassel (SJHC) beat Queen of Angels, 41-25, for the Blue League title. Finally, it was St. Vincent in the Gold League with a championship win over St. Joseph-St. Elizabeth (SISE), 46-32.

The Blue League powerhouse Squares capped off a phenomenal season racking up double medals by going undefeated in league play once again and claiming their sixth consecutive tournament championship.

Coach Jim Knapke praised his eighth graders, Evan Knapke, Aaron Rupright and Tyler Prince, who typically took turns as offensive leaders, while Patrick Wyss dominated the defensive duties.

He added, “Max Oberley was a great addition this season and adjusted well to his new role inside.”

Knapke also called on five talented seventh graders who were invaluable to his program. When comparing this group to past years, Knapke felt this team had come further from start to finish than any other.

The former St. Joseph-Hessen Cassel alum and standout described, “They were like an old engine. We got things going, then they stopped, got things going, then they stopped. We tweaked some more and finally ran smooth.”

Nowhere was this illustrated more than in the championship game. The Royals were well-coached and had a strong big guy (Austin Kinney).”

The eighth-grade team from St. Vincent made it a fourth straight in their CYO careers when they claimed the 2013 title.

Chris Paul coached the team during most of the regular season, but when his duties as head coach of the IPFW women’s team revved up, Courtney Paul and Mick Steele stepped in to finish things off. The Panthers ended with an amazing 23-4 overall record and their stellar league play earned them the No. 1 seed.

Courtney Paul explained, “The season started in November and the boys worked hard all year towards a CYO championship.”

Behind their team defense and outstanding rebounding, the Panthers also won their diocesan matchup against South Bend’s top team, St. Matthew, 39-30.

During their highly successful grade school run, Jalen Paul and Conlan Martin led the scoring attack for St. Vincent. The league’s tallest line up, St. Joseph-St. Elizabeth, finished runner-ups in the Gold League, playing an outstanding tournament at the No. 3 seed by knocking off the always-tough No. 2 seeded Cardinals from St. Charles.

St. Vincent’s seventh-grade squad also had a great run this year and won their tournament against a tough team from St. Charles. John Henry Reith and Tommy Steele each chipped in a dozen points in the championship game. The Panthers’ overall record tallied 20-2 and in addition to the White League CYO tourney, they also finished on top at the Hoops Fest.

Coach Dale Curry’s squad was full of athletic and talented players. During practices St. Vincent focused on developing fundamental skills. He explained, “Our team goal was to excel with tough defense and rebounding.” The Panthers succeeded averaging 10.9 steals per game and pulled down 69.5 percent of the rebounds resulting in outscoring their opponents by a season average of 21 points.

Curry detailed his biggest challenge this season, “We had a problem getting the boys to work collectively as a team. We had poor passing and decision making during the first half of the season. Fortunately, we were able to overcome these challenges and ended averaging just 10.3 turnovers per game. I commend the boys for their hard work ethic and following direction from the coaching staff.”

Curry’s coaching staff included Jon Bergstrom, Karl Veararro and John Reith this season.

Strok offers sense of the sacred in church architecture

BY ANN CAREY

SOUTH BEND — A new book by University of Notre Dame architecture professor Duncan G. Stroik has so many exquisite photos of churches that one might think at first glance it is another beautiful coffee-table book. “The Church Building as a Sacred Place: Beauty, Transcendence and the Eternal” certainly is a beautiful book, but it is so much more than pretty pictures.

Stroik writes in clear prose what every Catholic should know about the way a church building’s exterior and interior should reflect and enable the sacred actions that are celebrated within its walls. Helping to illustrate and enforce these concepts are over 170 photographs and drawings that date from early Christian places of worship to churches built in the 21st century.

In his introduction Stroik argues that the book is not a history of architecture. Nevertheless, the average person will learn a great deal about the architectural history of the Catholic Church in virtually every one of the 23 chapters in the book. Those chapters are divided into four parts: Principles of Church Design; Church Architecture Today; Modernism and Modernity; and Renaissance and Renewal.

Throughout the book, Stroik — who considers ecclesial architecture a “noble ministry” — diseases that Stroik dislikes churches designed by Modernist architects over the past century that look like modern secular buildings and are configured like theaters or auditoriums with minimal iconography. However, it is not just his personal dislike, but rather a strong sense that such churches give no visible indication of the sacredness of the building or the celebration that occurs therein, and they do not serve the needs of Catholic liturgy. Indeed, this reader was struck by one photograph of the interior of a modernist church that looked very much like a prison with its plain concrete walls.

“We need an architecture that helps raise our hearts and minds to heaven,” he writes, and he proves his case throughout the book by citing official Catholic Church documents.

In his section on Modernism, Stroik contends that many Modernist architects were influenced by Protestant meeting-room style churches as well as a desire to conform ecclesial design to the latest secular buildings. The result, he writes, are functional-looking buildings that do not function well for Catholic worship.

He builds a strong case for his assertion that classical and medieval churches are still relevant to contemporary culture, for they are a timeless “catechism in paint, mosaic and stone” that appeals in any age. Indeed, he notes that it often was a poorly formed liturgist and not the people in the pew who demanded many of the renovations — some would say “wreckovations” — of Catholic churches after Vatican II.

Stroik writes that sacred architecture is part of our Catholic patrimony, but he does not advocate simply copying famous Catholic churches of the past. Rather, he believes that church renovators and designers should learn from those classical models and apply to contemporary buildings what they learn about making a church beautiful and evocative of the sacred. To prove his case, he presents photos of several Catholic churches built in the last few years that are innovative and modern while at the same time beautiful examples of ecclesial architecture.

“As architects and artists regain the balance between tradition and innovation, architecture will become a humanistic enterprise once again,” Stroik writes.

Stroik’s final chapter contains 20 “prophecies” about the future of Catholic architecture in which he predicts: “A renaissance of Catholic architecture will ensue, driven by lay faithful and the Church leadership begin demanding beauty in the house of God.” Many Catholics probably hope that Stroik is a prophet in his own time.

“...the Eternal” certainly is a beautiful book. It not only reflects and enables the sacred actions that are celebrated within its walls, but it also helps raise our hearts and minds to heaven.

Stroik’s final chapter contains 20 “prophecies” about the future of Catholic architecture in which he predicts: “A renaissance of Catholic architecture will ensue, driven by lay faithful and the Church leadership begin demanding beauty in the house of God.” Many Catholics probably hope that Stroik is a prophet in his own time.

CONCLAVE

“The event of a conclave doesn’t just involve a small circle of particular people who gather to make their own little decision. It’s an ecclesial event at which the cardinals represent the entire College of Bishops,” he said.

Catholics are called to enter spiritually into the Sistine Chapel with the cardinal electors, he said.

“With our hearts we are all in the Sistine Chapel to await, through the voting, the Lord’s indication of who the next pope should be,” he said.

Archbishop Marini also headed the group of liturgical and theological experts who designed the Mass for the installation of a new pope. The text was not approved by Blessed John Paul in 1998 when he approved the rites for a conclave, Archbishop Marini said, because the late pope did not want to dictate how his successor would initiate his ministry.

One important value in designing the Mass, which was approved by Pope Benedict XVI the day after his election, was to ensure that the gestures associated with the papal installation — like receiving the fisherman’s ring and the pallium — were connected to the Gospel passages that inspired them, Archbishop Marini said. In 2005, the pope received the symbols immediately after the Gospel reading.

The Gospel text foreseen for the Mass is from John 21, which includes Jesus telling his disciples to cast their nets into the sea, as well as Jesus telling Peter, “Feed my sheep.” The fisherman’s ring depicts Peter casting out his net to be a fisher of men; and the pallium, a wool band worn around the shoulders, evokes a shepherd carrying his sheep, Archbishop Marini said.

“The consignment of the symbols right after the reading, he said, highlights the fact that the Gospel is not ‘simply an account of events that occurred long ago, but is a message that continues to have relevance today. The words said to Peter are said again today to the successor of Peter.”

Archbishop Marini’s successor, Msgr. Guido Marini, who is not related, told the Vatican newspaper that continuing a process begun under Pope Benedict, gestures — like giving the new pope the ring and pallium — that are not sacramental would take place before the Mass begins.

Msgr. Marini, the current master of ceremonies, said Pope Benedict ordered the changes shortly before resigning Feb. 28.

The new pope’s installation, he said, also would include a return to the practice of all the cardinals present publicly paying homage and promising obedience to the new pope. During the installation Mass, Archbishop Marini designed for Pope Benedict, 12 people were chosen to represent all Catholics: three cardinals, a bishop, a dean, a priest, a transitional deacon, a male religious, a female religious, a married couple and a young man and a young woman recently confirmed.

Archbishop Marini said it was Pope Benedict himself who thought a “symbolic” number was better than having all the cardinals come up to him, otherwise the procession would “unbalance” the Mass. Besides, the archbishop said, there will be the 114 other electors, plus possibly another 65 cardinals over 80 at the Mass. If each cardinal took 30 seconds to pay homage, that part of the celebration alone would last 90 minutes.

But Msgr. Marini told L’Osservatore Romano, the Vatican newspaper, that returning to the practice of all the cardinals paying homage publicly was a way to illustrate the universality of the Church.

Msgr. Kevin W. Irwin, a professor of liturgical studies at The Catholic University of America, joined Archbishop Marini for the press briefing March 9.

He explained that the conclave begins with a procession from the Pauline Chapel in the Apostolic Palace to the Sistine Chapel as a reminder that all people are on a pilgrimage from one place to another on this earth as they make their way home to God.

“The entire conclave,” he said, “is liturgy. It’s prayer from beginning to end.”

The conclave handbook, Msgr. Irwin said, emphasizes that the conclave “is not only a juridical action — how do you choosing chads, it’s not about that. It’s about prayer.”

Australian Jesuit Father Richard Leonard, author of the new book “Why Bother Praying,” said when Catholics pray for the cardinals, “The thing we’re primarily doing is asking God to give them the greatest insight into who the Holy Spirit wants to lead the Catholic Church right now.”

“We’ve had bad conclaves... when God looks to have been more absent than present,” he said. “Some Catholics live under the false impression that every conclave has been open to the Holy Spirit, but anybody who knows Church history knows that’s just not true,” even if the Holy Spirit still ensured that those popes could not destroy the Church.

Praying that the Holy Spirit assist the cardinals, he said, “also changes me, changes us.” People praying may have a favorite candidate, but asking God to guide the conclave makes them recognize that the key value is not so much who walks out on the balcony of St. Peter’s Basilica as the new pope, but as that “the Gospel be most clearly proclaimed to the world.”
