Bishop Dwenger, Catholic Relief Services partner with iNeighbor initiative

BY TIM JOHNSON

FORT WAYNE — Bishop Dwenger High School is one of only 16 high schools in the U.S. to partner with Catholic Relief Services (CRS) as a Global Neighbor School.

Through the iNeighbor initiative, “Catholic youth, parents, school administrators and faculty learn about the work of CRS around the world and co-create ways to actively live out Jesus’ love,” reported the website, http://ineighbor.crs.org. Catholic Relief Services carries out the commitment of the U.S. bishops to assist the poor outside the U.S.

“CRS Neighbor connects us with our global family,” the website stated. “By identifying with the needs and gifts of our global neighbor, we learn about ourselves.”

Last week, the Bishop Dwenger community focused on and encouraged a spirit of global solidarity among students, teachers, administrators and staff that culminated in a school prayer assembly on Friday, April 19.

At the assembly, Principal Jason Schiffli told the students that the program will hopefully be a springboard. The students will learn about the work of CRS and follow their services throughout their lives. And other schools will want to partner with the CRS iNeighbor initiative.

“We are here to serve,” noted Schiffli at the assembly, which Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades attended and offered a blessing.

Annual Bishop’s Appeal exceeds last year’s campaign

The 26th Annual Bishop’s Appeal has exceeded all previous with pledges totaling $6,426,164, which is $129,093 more than last year.

Bishop Kevin C. Rhodes said, “The 26th Annual Bishop’s Appeal was another great success. I am deeply grateful to all the faithful who so generously contributed to the appeal this year, the Year of Faith.”

“I am constantly edified by the faith of our people, expressed through charity,” Bishop Rhodes added. “A living faith is one that is manifest in love. I thank all who, motivated by faith, give so generously to the Church to fulfill its holy mission in our diocese.”

Harry Verhiley, Secretary for Stewardship and Development, and director of the Annual Bishop’s Appeal, told Today’s Catholic, “The success of this year’s Annual Bishop’s Appeal is, once again, a witness of our faith. The generosity of our people, throughout the diocese, puts into action this Year of Faith because the appeal funds the efforts of the New Evangelization.”

“The work funded by the appeal is about intensifying our efforts to share Jesus Christ with the world,” he added. “This is important work of the Church, such as Catholics Come Home, religious education, seminarian support, Catholic school funding, youth ministry and works of charity.”

The Annual Bishop’s Appeal is successful because it begins in the parish and is oriented toward the parish. Each parish is assigned a goal according to an objective calculation based on parish offertory totals. All overage from the appeal is returned to the parish.

A successful parish appeal means not only success for diocesan ministries and services, but also success for the parish. Strong parishes mean a strong diocese. Ultimately, all ministries and services funded by the appeal promote the fullness of pastoral and spiritual renewal of all parishes.

The goal for the 2012 appeal was $4,892,200 and a total sum of $6,426,164 was pledged.

“Our success also means that the work of Christ in our parishes remains strong, because this year we raised $1,533,964 over our $4.9 million goal and the parishes that went over goal will receive the overage once it is collected,” Verhiley noted.
What is marriage?

IN TRUTH AND CHARITY

BY BISHOP KEVIN C. RHODES

A year or so ago, I wrote a column in Today’s Catholic on defending the truth about marriage. It is important to write again about this very important matter as the Supreme Court is considering the constitutionality of the Defense of Marriage Act as well as that of California’s Proposition 8.

There is much heated debate in our country about this issue as some seek the redefinition of marriage to include unions of persons of the same sex. Proponents of so-called “same-sex marriage” have framed the issue as one of equality and justice. With love and respect for our brothers and sisters who disagree, we believe that, as the Church affirms that marriage, by its very nature, can only be between a man and a woman. This is not only a teaching of faith, but a fundamental truth that precedes and transcends cultures and nations.

This whole debate should center on the fundamental question: “What is Marriage?” Proponents of the redefinition of marriage seem to identify marriage as simply a bond between two persons who wish to share their lives together, as essentially an emotional union. They want this sharing of life and love to be recognized as marriage with all its attendant legal benefits.

True marriage, however, is more than a consensual relationship between two adults who wish to share their lives together. By its very nature, marriage is conjugal, that is, it has a bodily as well as an emotional and spiritual bond. There is an excellent book that I highly recommend which explains the spiritual bond. There is an excellent book that I highly recommend which explains the spiritual bond. It is entitled: What Is Marriage? My4. Truth About Woman and Man by Sherif Girgis, Ryan T. Anderson, and Robert P. George, published by Encounter Books.

This book explains how “marriage is, of its very nature, a unique union; a union of will (by consent) and body (by sexual union); inherently ordered to procreation and the broad sharing of family life; and calling for permanent and exclusive commitment.” It is opposed by the Church as an essential union and cohabitation. It is inherently connected to bodily union and family life.

Marriage is a unique union. Male-female complementarity is intrinsic to marriage and is naturally ordered toward authentic union and the generation of new life. These are essential attributes of marriage, not incidental or relative.

Proponents of marriage redefinition, as I mentioned, claim that legalizing same-sex marriage is a matter of justice and equality. But the promotion and protection of marriage as the union of one man and one woman is itself a matter of justice. As the U.S. bishops state: “It would be a matter of grave injustice if the state ignored the unique and proper place of husbands and wives, the place of mothers and fathers, and especially the rights of children.” We believe the state must not deprive children of the right to a mother and father.

Archbishop Thomas Wenski of Miami recently wrote the following: “Same-sex marriage has been advanced as a cause for equality — by claiming the benefits to homosexual couples that have been afforded historically to married heterosexual couples. Not to give these benefits is alleged to be discriminatory. Or, course, as fair minded citizens, we do hold that no one should be denied a job or a house; no one should be subjected to harassment or discrimination.

But, that the state recognizes and favors the marriage of one man and one woman as a natural fact rooted in procreation and sexual difference is in no way unjust to homosexual couples any more than it is unjust to heterosexual couples who cohabit without the legal benefits and protections of a civil marriage.”

Blessed John Paul II once explained “how incongruous is the demand to accord ‘marital’ status to unions between persons of the same sex. It is opposed, first of all, by the objective impossibility of making the partnership fruitful through the transmission of life according to the plan inscribed by God in the very structure of the human being. Another obstacle is the incompatibility of the conditions for that interpersonal complementarity between male and female willed by the Creator at both the physical-biological and the eminently psychological levels.”

This is not fair. As Catholics, we affirm that homosexual persons are to be fully respected in their human dignity. This is a moral duty.

This duty, however, does not justify the recognition of a right to marriage between persons of the same sex and its being considered equivalent to the family.

Our United States Conference of Catholic Bishops has affirmed the urgency of opposing efforts “that undermine marriage as the permanent, faithful, and fruitful union of one man and one woman and a fundamental moral and social institution essential to the common good.” We have called upon our legislators, especially those who are Catholic, to uphold the family built upon marriage between a man and a woman. This is a grave responsibility. It is deeply saddening and disappointing when a Catholic legislator makes public policy choices in opposition to our fundamental moral teachings on human life, marriage, and other preeminent issues.

When he was Archbishop of Buenos Aires, our new Holy Father, Pope Francis, vigorously opposed the redefinition of marriage in Argentina. He encouraged the faithful to protest against legislation that eventually made Argentina the first Latin American country to legalize same-sex marriage. He confidently alleged that the Supreme Court would uphold Proposition 8 and the Defense of Marriage Act, thus respecting the very nature of marriage as the union of one man and one woman.

May the Blessed Virgin Mary and Saint Joseph intercede for our country that it may safeguard the truth of marriage and the good of the family!

By Ann Carey

The Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend has several important committees and/or boards that assist Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades in keeping the diocese running smoothly. One of the most crucial boards is one that many people don’t know much about because it conducts its business quietly in order to protect the privacy of the people and issues it handles.

In 2005, the U.S. Bishops approved a “Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People” that directed the establishment of a National Review Board as well as review boards at the diocesan level. The diocesan level review board is charged with advising the local bishop in his assessment of allegations of sexual abuse of minors by a priest or deacon of the diocese and in his determination of suitability for ministry. It also reviews diocesan policies for dealing with sexual abuse of minors.

The Review Board for this diocese meets twice a year. Bishop Rhoades also consults board members in between regular meeting when appropriate. As the national charter directs, the diocese’s Review Board is made up mostly of lay people who have a variety of expertise (see sidebar).

“Much of good ministry, so much of powerful ministry, is quiet,” said Mary Glowaski, victim assistance coordinator and director of the diocesan Secretariat for Evangelization and Special Ministries. “But I do think it’s important that this diocese under both Bishop D’Arcy and Bishop Rhoades takes very seriously this charter, and the review committee is an integral and essential part of really honoring the dignity of both the victim and the accused, as well as the dignity of the Church as an institution.”

Msgr. Robert Schulte, diocesan vicar general/chancellor, usually receives reports of an allegation, but allegations can also be made to Glowaski by telephone or e-mail. Information about how to report abuse is posted on the diocesan website and regularly published in parish bulletins.

Most allegations the diocese receives are from the past, Glowaski said, adding that recent allegations involve people who worked in the diocese, not priests.

Catholic Cicchello, safe environment coordinator for the diocese, told Today’s Catholic that when a person contacts the diocese with an allegation, he or she is interviewed by at least two people who document the story. Then寺院 staff conducts an investigation to try to establish the truth in order to verify or disprove the allegation. That information from the investigation is brought to the Review Board for discussion.

Each person contacting the diocese with an allegation is advised of their rights by the diocese’s Review Board. Msgr. Michael Heintz, rector of St. Matthew Cathedral and director of the Master of Divinity Program at Notre Dame, explained that “it’s really a part of a broad review and the board members offer suggestions and recommendations for Bishop Rhoades to take under advisement. They all have different expertise, and so it really brings together so many different disciplines as you look at each one of these situations.”

“I feel certainly the diocese is well served, but so are the victims, and so are the ones who are accused.”

deep and true compassion that Bishop Rhoades has for victims of abuse,” said Schmid, who also is a member of the review board of the Congregation of Holy Cross. “I have great confidence in our bishop to do the right thing at every turn in this critical area of Church life.”

Cicchello added that as a mother, she can assure other parents that the diocese is committed to protecting children, and the board plays a crucial role: “I find the review board a very, very important group of people who are serious, experienced and intelligent, very thoughtful and concerned about what they are doing. They take the responsibility to heart and they are very careful but very wise,” she said.

“I find that bishop listens very intently to all of them, to what they say, and really cares and considers their advice profoundly in making the decisions he needs to make,” she added.

Bishop Rhoades expressed his profound gratitude for the work of the Diocesan Review Board, stating that “the members of the Review Board have offered me excellent advice in dealing with cases involving sexual abuse and misconduct. Their expertise and professional advice are invaluable to me and the diocese. They help immensely in the very important task of protecting children and young people in the Church. I think the establishment of review boards as mandated by the charter has been an important part of the Church’s efforts to protect children, assist victims, develop good policies, and assess specific situations. I thank our Review Board for its dedication and hard work.”

The Most Rev. Kevin C. Rhoades, Bishop of the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend, has made the following appointment, effective May 9, 2013:

Rev. Ajay Tiru to parochial vicar, Our Lady of Good Hope Parish, Fort Wayne.

By Joseph Austin

WASHINGTON (CNS) — When a team of health officials and investigators looking into illegal drug use raided Dr. Kermit Barron Gosnell’s Women’s Medical Society Feb. 18, 2010, they happened upon what many are calling a “house of horrors.”

“There was blood on the floor. A stench of urine filled the air. A flea-infested cat was wandering through the facility, and there were cut fees on the stairs,” said a grand jury report about the conditions found in the clinic Gosnell ran in West Philadelphia.

The two surgical rooms resembled a “bad gas station rest-room,” according to Agent Stephen Dougherty of the federal Drug Enforcement Agency. The team went on to recover the remains of 45 fetuses “in bags, milk jugs, orange juice cartons, and even in cat-food containers,” the report explained.

Three days later, the Pennsylvania Department of Health suspended Gosnell’s license. He was arrested in January 2011 and charged with seven counts of infanticide. A judge suspended Gosnell’s license. He is accused of sticking a pair of medical scissors into the back of the necks of prematurely born babies and cutting the spinal cord; a procedure he called “snipping.”

According to Pennsylvania Department of Health spokeswoman Kait Gillis, because of “tougher regulations and new leadership today, abortion facilities are being held accountable to higher standards to better protect the health and safety of women.”

“We have a far deeper understanding of these facilities now than we did then (when Gosnell’s abuses were uncovered) and conduct regular annual and unannounced inspections, not only because the law tells us to, but because we are committed to doing what is right,” she said.

Jeanne Monahan, president of the March for Life Education & Defense Fund, said that “Americans as a whole think that abortion clinics are sanitary decent clinics,” but the “majority of abortion clinics in our country are held to very minimal standards: legally the same standards as beauty parlors and pet clinics.”

“Over the years, many people came to know that something was going on here. But no one put a stop to it,” the report explained. “All health care providers must be regulated, and these regulations should be based on health care needs — not on politics.”

“Planned Parenthood insists on the highest standards of patient care and has rigorous safety guidelines in place,” Steinberg added.

Lila Rose, president of Live Action, told CNS in an emailed statement that “as long as these clinics enjoy such privileges — privileges no health department would ever grant to any hospital — we will never know how many Kermit Gosnells are out there. And every time we find the next one, it will be too late.”

Rose, a 24-year-old Catholic who joined the Church, officially became involved with the abortion cause at 15 when she founded Live Action, a pro-life nonprofit specializing in investigative journalism. Since then she has received national recognition for her hidden-camera exposes of the Planned Parenthood abortion industry, which she calls “reckless (and) unregulated.”

“Abortion doesn’t help women,” she explained that the pro-life movement operates more than 3,000 pregnancy resource centers for mothers and families in need, offering them assistance so they do not feel abortion is their only alternative.

“When those are the places we need to be building up,” she said, noting that more than 90 percent of the funding for such centers is private. While Monahan acknowledged the Gosnell case is a somewhat extreme case, she said that it highlights the violence of the abortion procedure, which she describes as being “deeply invasive” to the woman. She said it also shines a light on what she termed is the sad reality of the abortion business.

“There is no constitutional right to maim and kill women and girls nationwide,” said Kristi Hamrick, spokeswoman for Americans United for Life. “One woman’s death is too many. The mere existence of protective laws is not enough. State officials must also consistently enforce these laws.”

School choice, child safety, new abortion regulations among ICC priorities to become law

INDIANAPOLIS — As the Indiana General Assembly nears its mandated April 29 adjournment deadline, efforts by the Indiana Catholic Conference (ICC) to expand school choice; enhance child safety; improve regulations for abortion; and assist members of the immigrant community were among several legislative successes this year.

Hoosier families with school children will gain additional access to a school voucher. House Bill 1003, authored by State Rep. Bob Behning, R-Indianapolis, includes access to a voucher for siblings of current voucher students to also be eligible to receive a scholarship and provides access to a voucher for children with special needs. Students who are income eligible can receive a voucher as early as kindergarten if their home school had received an “F” on its state report card. The bill increases the scholarship cap for elementary school students.

“The sibling component is important because it will allow access for families who are income eligible to have all their children in the same school building using a voucher rather than just one,” said Glenn Tebbe, ICC executive director. “While the kindergarten eligibility provides another entry point for income eligible students, it doesn’t provide the school choice model that we are aiming for. We believe all parents deserve the ability to send their children to the school of their choice. A failing school should not be a requirement. There is more work to be done, and we will continue to work toward providing parents and families a wider scope of access to vouchers.”

Another victory for families and children this year included the passage of a law to enhance childcare safety regulations. The bill, Senate Bill 305, authored by State Sen. Travis Holdman, R-Markle, would require childcare providers who receive childcare vouchers for low-income families to meet basic safety standards and provide age-appropriate learning opportunities. Holdman learned that some childcare providers in the state were registered as ministry childcare providers to become exempt from safety regulations, “but were doing so in name only.”

After visiting some of these providers, Holdman realized that the current law needed to address the problem. Holdman said the religious exemption was put in place to allow churches to provide care without having to meet the same stringent requirements as other licensed centers, primarily because most ministries are providing high quality care, and have their own safety standards in place.

Another legislative success for the ICC would require regulations for chemical abortions. Chemical abortion, commonly known as RU 486, now will be held to same regulatory standards as surgical abortion. The proposal, Senate Bill 371, also authored by Holdman, requires facilities that dispense abortion-inducing drugs to meet the same medical standards as those that provide surgical abortions. The proposal requires a doctor who prescribes the abortion-inducing drugs to examine the woman in person, and schedule follow-up care. It prohibits telemed practices where a doctor could use Skype to discuss options with the pregnant mother rather than an in person exam.

It changes Indiana’s informed consent law for abortion to include those seeking chemical abortion. It requires a woman seeking any type of abortion to see an ultrasound and hear fetal heart tones unless she certifies in writing that she declines. It requires the Indiana Department of Health to provide color illustrations, rather than black and white, showing fetal development stages for abortion centers to provide to abortion clients.

The bill specifically states that an abortion-inducing drug may not be administered to a woman after nine weeks and attaches criminal charges, a Class C felony, to any doctor who dispenses the drug after nine weeks.

“Bringing this type of abortion in-line with Indiana’s current informed consent law could make a big impact on the women considering abortion,” said Tebbe. “It is our hope that more will choose life. Having an ultrasound or seeing pictures of a developing baby, which is available as part of the informed consent may make the difference.”

A bill to grant undocumented college students access to in-state college tuition crossed the finish line and will become law July 1, before the classes resume in the fall of 2013. Senate Bill 207, authored by State Sen. Jean Leising, R-Oldenburg, allows undocumented college students who were enrolled in college when the law took effect in 2011, to receive in-state college tuition. “While it is a small victory for those who are undocumented, it will certainly help those who were negatively impacted by the law and can move forward to complete college,” said Tebbe.

This year the ICC tracked over 150 bills all having a potential impact on the dignity of the human person, and the common good for families and children.

By Joan Kurkowski-Gilien

WEST, Texas (CNS) — Father Ed Karasek was driving home from a meeting in Austin when reports of a massive explosion at a fertilizer plant in West came across the radio. The tragedy’s human toll hit close and they’re all family to one another.”

“We have a tremendous faith in God and a belief that He overcomes the world,” said Deacon Denver Kennedy. “People from all parishes in the northern towns between Waco and Fort Worth settled by Czech immigrants in the 1850s. “People are very close and they’re all family to one another.”

“The mystery of the voice is striking; from the time we are in our mother’s womb we learn to recognize her voice and that of our dad,” he said. “From the tone of a voice we can perceive love or contempt, and that leads us even beyond the abyss of death.”

“The voice of Jesus is unique,” Pope Francis said. “If we learn to distinguish it, He will guide us on the path of our life, a path that leads us to the finaldestination.”

“The best thing one can offer is a calming presence. He said the organist at Nativity of the Assumption in Fort Worth, offered prayers and support to the people of West and the Diocese of Austin in the wake of the explosion. Catholic Charities of Fort Worth, offered prayers and support to the people of West and the Diocese of Austin in the wake of the explosion. Catholic Charities of Fort Worth, also was working with local efforts. The Knights of Columbus in West, Texas, also was working with local groups and the authorities to assist with disaster relief.

BY VINCENZA LABARRITA

FORT WAYNE — When Cheryl Mowan was “retired” for financial reasons in 2006 as minister of services from St. Therese Church at age 59, she settled into doing what many retirees do. She and her husband, Mike, dined out more, did some traveling — to Brown County, in the fall and to Florida in the winter — and enjoyed having the freedom for shopping, attending concerts and spending more time with their two children and four grandchildren.

Mowan also belongs to several organizations, which occupy her time monthly, including her CRHP (Christ Renews His Parish) group of nearly 31 years, two book clubs and is a catechist for RCIA (Rite of Christian Initiation for Adults). About 25 years ago, while working at St. Therese as the secretary, she was asked by the district president of the St. Vincent de Paul Society of Allen County, Inc. to become an associate member of the charitable organization. She wouldn’t have to attend meetings, but it would enable her to continue helping with the parish food bank and filling out the necessary forms to refer people who came to the church office for assistance to the St. Vincent de Paul Store at 1600 S. Calhoun St. in Fort Wayne for free goods.

Similarly saying “yes” and becoming a Vincentian “rather blindly,” she admitted, led her to begin attending bi-monthly SVDP conference meetings in the church basement and assuming the co-presidency, with her husband, of the 22 conferences representing 24 parishes. Three years ago, surprisingly running unopposed, Cheryl was elected district president, serving six counties in the Fort Wayne area. And in that capacity, the so-called “retiree” has accomplished a significant achievement for the 171-year-old association of Catholic lay men and women devoted to the spiritual growth of its members and personal service to the poor.

With an eight-year background in bookkeeping at St. Therese, Mowan eventually started looking into the thrift store’s finances since the facility had been in the red for many years. “Two things made it workable,” she said. “Some key managerial people were approaching retirement age, which gave us an opportunity to take things in a different direction, and mostly, we had a generous bequest that allowed us to refurbish the store.”

Mowan reasoned it was a long-term investment. “If we could get the store turned around to where it’s making a profit instead of a loss, then all of the profit — after the store is in good shape and well maintained — goes to help the poor,” she emphasized.

“It’s just been a total blessing,” she added. “I felt as though this whole thing was God-given. Every time I turned around with a question of how we were going to do this or manage that, it was just handed to me on a platter. Either the right person stepped forward or the money was there. It was an incredible miraculous process!”

“It’s like the perfect storm,” she continued. “I came into this job with some knowledge of accounting because of my parish experience and within the year realized something was amiss.” She related how, starting last July, they closed the store for two weeks and did a deep cleaning, which included hiring professionals to scrub floors, paint walls and “jazz it up with some graphics.” They fixed broken windows, repaired the elevator, added new signage and re-arranged the merchandise.

From August 2012 through the next six months, the store was in the black and paid off all its bills, including $35,000 owed the diocese for insurance and employee benefits, Mowan related proudly. “All of our accounts are current and we don’t have to borrow money from the district council to keep the doors open,” she emphasized. “It was a huge group effort with about 20 Vincentians from several parish conferences and other volunteers helping move furniture, clean, replace light bulbs, doors, sort merchandise and weed out unsalable items to fill five dumpsters.”

Traffic has increased in the store to the extent they now have to worry about having enough parking. Other projects in the works include installing an eight-foot security fence to discourage unauthorized weekend dumping of unsalable items. “Even useable goods often are ruined because of the weather,” she stated. New phone, announcement and security systems also are being installed. “It’s all a part of doing business in the downtown area. You have to be extra vigilant,” said Mowan.

“The worst is over. And it’s really been exciting to watch the store turn around and be proud of it.” They’ve created a Catholic Corner, giving away rosaries, books and videos. “We want people to know we’re Catholic,” Mowan added. “Even if I don’t run for re-election, I’m going to ask to be on the store committee because I’d like to see us open one or two more stores in outlying areas.”

One reason Mowan might not run for re-election concerns her health. In the midst of the workload, last December doctors discovered Cheryl has breast cancer. She’s halfway through six months of chemotherapy, followed by surgery. Besides being initially concerned whether she would live or die, “it has been a neat experience,” she said. “because of the outpouring of love, concern, cards, food and prayers by so many people. I just feel so lifted up,” she exclaimed.

“Sometimes it brings me to tears! “I’d like to encourage people who are fighting cancer to be positive about it and know all those prayer lines are touching and so humbling. You feel like you’re being blessed. It’s like God reaching out and caressing your face with His fingertips by all these people,” she concluded.

BY DENISE FEDOROW

GOSHEN — History means something to St. John the Evangelist parishioner Shirley Swartz. The history of her family, the history of the 100-year-old home she’s lived in most of her life and the history of her faith.

Swartz is one of possibly a handful of senior parishioners at St. John the Evangelist in Goshen who received every sacrament at the church from Baptism on and still attends Mass there — as frequently as her health allows.

Shirley related that she was baptized at St. John and brought back to the very home she is living in now on West Wilden Street on the city’s northwest side. Her paternal grandfather, August (Gus) Marquis moved his family from Illinois to Lagrange County where he was a farmer. When his wife passed away leaving him with seven children, he moved his family from Illinois to Goshen.

Shirley related that she was baptized at St. John and brought back to the very home she is living in now on West Wilden Street on the city’s northwest side. Her paternal grandfather, August (Gus) Marquis moved his family from Illinois to Lagrange County where he was a farmer. When his wife passed away leaving him with seven children, he moved his family from Illinois to Goshen.

Shirley’s youngest until eighth grade — she was at the school — the two oldest until sixth grade and the two youngest Until August’s death. Her mother married a man named Roy Swartz who was a farmer. When his wife passed away leaving him with seven children, he moved his family from Illinois to Goshen.

August also became a parishioner at St. John’s and a bulletin Shirley has in a scrapbook dated from 1924 lists his name as well as his daughter Irene and his son Wilfred — Shirley’s dad. When Shirley’s dad married he apparently stayed in the home for a long time until building a home on Gra Roy Drive.

Keeping with the family history, Shirley also stayed in the family home after marrying her late husband Richard Swartz. The couple had four children — Stu Swartz, Margaret Kuiper, Sandra Swartz and Sarah Brady. Shirley has seven grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. Shirley said if memory serves her correctly, St. John Parish had a school before her time that closed and then re-opened later. So she herself never attended St. John School, but all of her four children did.

A student at Parkside Elementary she was the only Catholic in her group of friends and said her friends’ moms were respectful of that and made her special dishes on Fridays. Shirley attended Wednesday evening and Saturday morning religious education classes as a child growing up in the parish. She said her grandfather and father both did a lot of work around the church — carpentry and maintenance work, and both helped build St. Mary Church in Bristol.

Shirley said while her children were at the school — the two oldest until eighth grade and the two youngest until sixth grade — she put in a lot of hours on the playground doing playground duty.

“Even before I could drive I remember taking a taxi to the school to do playground duty,” she said.

Shirley was with the choir for a short time and was active in the Altar Rosary Society. In later years she became involved with a small group — many of whom were peers who have since died.

House party

Shirley said that last year she threw a party for her house, which has been in the family for the 100-year-old home she’s lived in Goshen.

Dozens of area priests, parishioners and community leaders will fill Sharathon by showcasing each hour though sharing of their stories, and how the Catholic faith is changing lives in the parishes and through community outreach.

Gay marriage and the breakdown of moral argument

In his classic text "After Virtue," the philosopher Alasdair MacIntyre lamented, not so much the immorality that runs rampant in our contemporary society, but something more fundamental and in the long run more dangerous, namely, that we are no longer even capable of having a real argument about moral matters.

The assumptions that once undergirded any coherent conversation about ethics, he said, are no longer taken for granted or universally shared. The result is that, in regard to questions of what is right and wrong, we simply talk past one another, or more often, scream at each other.

I thought of MacIntyre’s observation when I read a recent article on the Supreme Court’s consideration of the much-vaunted issue of gay marriage. It was reported that, in the wake of the oral argument in the marriage cases, Justice Elena Kagan remarked, “Whenever someone expresses moral disapproval in a legal context, the red flag of discrimination goes up for me.”

Notice that the justice did not say that discrimination is the result of a bad moral argument. Rather, she simply stated that any appeal to morality is, ipso facto, tantamount to discrimination. Or to state it in MacIntyre’s terms, since even attempting to make a moral argument is an exercise in futility, doing so can only be construed as an act of aggression.

I will leave to the side the radical inconsistency involved in saying that one has an ethical objection (discrimination!) to the making of an ethical objection, but I would indeed like to draw attention to a very dangerous implication of this incoherent position. If argument is indeed a non-starter, the only recourse we have in the adjudication of our disputes is violence, either direct or indirect.

This is precisely why a word on fire

We must love as Jesus loved

THE SUNDAY GOSPEL

5th Sunday of Easter
Jn 13:31-33a, 34-35

Once again in this Easter season, the Acts of the Apostles supplies the first reading for the Mass. It reports some of the missionary activities of Paul and Barnabas. Although eventually they parted, Paul and Barnabas, Paul’s disciple, visited several prominent cities in Asia Minor and the Roman Empire of the first century AD.

While ancient traditions see all the Apostles as missionaries, most of whom were near and wide to proclaim the Gospel, the Acts of the Apostles concentrates on Paul’s efforts in missionaryizing.

The reading is more than a travelogue. It is a lesson about the faith of Paul and Barnabas and about their uncompromising determination to make Jesus known. It also reveals the conditions in which these two great figures in early Christianity lived.

As they spoke to Christians in the cities that they visited, they warned these followers of Christ that hostility, and difficulties, faced them. Their martyrdom even sprung from their own personal experiences. Paul and Barnabas themselves met opposition and endured difficulties.

It is not surprising that these two great champions of the Gospel faced hardships. The culture of the Roman Empire was absolutely hostile to the values of the Gospel. The political order was becoming hostile as well.

Nonetheless Paul and Barnabas were undaunted. They continued to move from city to city, from Christian community to Christian community, to reassure believers in Christ and to promote Gospel values. Despite the risks, and the more than occasional rejections, their faith inspired them and impelled them.

For the second reading, the Church this weekend offers a passage from the Book of Revelation. This book, the last book of the New Testament in the translations and versions that have used for centuries, is highly poetic and symbolic. It is moving and strikingly beautiful in its imagery very often, but often its symbolism are so involved, so unique to the first century, that understanding the book is not easy without reading scholarly commentaries along with the text itself.

In this reading, the vision is of heaven, symbolized by the holy city of Jerusalem, but a transformed Jerusalem, and of God. It is moving into eternity and to the reward promised to those who love God.

St. John’s Gospel is the source of this text. This is not a Resurrection Narrative, but it is strongly reminiscent of the Resurrection, and of the Lord’s ascension, Gal 3:1-14.

Jesus obliquely refers to the crucifixion. He also refers to rising from the dead. Eternal life is to love God, and to love human beings who follow the Lord in obedience to God, in sacrifice, and in faith.

With Jesus, the faithful will die but also rise to eternal life.

Reflection

A month ago the Church called us, with joy and the deepest faith, to celebrate the Resurrection of Jesus after the terrible event of the crucifixion. Gradually, at least in the Church, the church has called upon us to respond to Jesus, to bond ourselves with the salvation brought to humanity by Jesus.

This weekend’s readings proclaim the sacrificial death as well as the rising of Jesus from the dead, but it also calls us to respond by following the Lord. As the second reading from Revelation, eternal life with God, in heaven will be our reward.

While still in this life, we authentically become disciples by loving God, each other and all people, as Jesus loved. In this divine love, Jesus died on Calvary as a sacrifice. In God’s plan divine love triumphed when Jesus rose from the dead.

We are not alone in our effort to be with God, to love as Jesus loved. The Apostles are with us in their successors, successors to early bishops such as Barnabas, who still guide us and strengthen us in the Church.

Claiming our faith

BY SISTER MARGIE LAVONIS, CSC

This Year of Faith gives us a special opportunity to really reflect on what it means to be a person who believes or universally shared.

Or, hopefully, Jesus is someone who is there for you in the good times and when life is hard. Does your belief in His loving presence give you comfort and a part of your ordinary life? Is He a personal friend or a figure “out there somewhere”? Do you spend time with Him? Do you desire to get to know Him better and to love Him more?

I heard in ahornily recently, there is a difference between belief and real faith. We believe everything our Church teaches and obey all the commandments, but we will never grow in faith unless Jesus is in the center of it. The Pharisees were obedient to the letter of the law but never really knew and accepted Jesus.

Our faith is empty without Him. Take some time during this Year of Faith and honestly reflect on your relationship with Jesus and the Church. Are Jesus and the Church an important part of your life? Who have you spoken to about Him lately? We are called to claim and proclaim our faith.

Sandy Hook parish extends gratitude

On behalf of our community and parish, St. Rose of Lima in Newtown, Conn., we extend our gratitude to each of you who remembered us in prayer following the events of Dec. 14, 2012, at Sandy Hook Elementary School.

We quickly realized the universality of the Church by the outpouring of support and concern that was shown to us by so many in our faith communities. The cards and letters from families and from dioceses that contacted us are ever before the Lord. We also received a number of rosaries, prayer cards, religious works of art, memorial vestments, relics, books focusing on grief and healing, original and recorded religious CDs and a variety of poems, spiritual reflections and written meditations to help guide us in providing comfort and support.

We know that the road ahead of us will be a long one, but we are grateful for the pouring of generosity and love shown to us. We are truly blessed by many prayers, blessings, and the kindness of our priests, deacons, and religious sisters and brothers for their love and understanding.

Your generosity reminded us that we are not alone during this very sad and difficult time.

We also want to thank our brother priests, deacons and religious sisters and brothers for their letters, phone calls, and encouragement. Spiritual bouquets, Mass cards, hours of Adoration before the Blessed Sacrament and remembrances by many prayer groups have lifted our spirits knowing that our intentions are ever before the Lord. We also received a number of rosaries, prayer cards, religious works of art, memorial vestments, relics, books focusing on grief and healing, original and recorded religious CDs and a variety of poems, spiritual reflections and written meditations to help guide us in providing comfort and support.

We know that the road ahead of us will be a long one, but we are grateful for the pouring of generosity and love shown to us. We are truly blessed by many acts of faith and kindness. Please know that you continue to be, through your prayers of gratitude for the goodness you have demonstrated to us in so many ways.

God bless,
Going too far with DNR?

Resuscitating a patient who undergoes a cardiac arrest or stops breathing often involves multiple procedures. When a resuscitation “Code Blue” is called in the hospital (or on a TV show), something like a medical “flash mob” comes together to try to save the patient. The sequence of events typically involves a combination of CPR, airway assistance, medications and shock when the resuscitation is performed in a clinical setting. Sometimes these interventions can seem unwarrented or extreme, and one can wonder whether it would be OK to fill out a “Do Not Resuscitate” order (DNR) for themselves or for a family member. Would declining permission to resuscitate someone mean they are abandoning their loved one? Each crisis or emergency situation will have unique contours, and the question of our moral duty to provide resuscitation will vary with the details of each case. Sometimes a DNR order will be a reasonable choice; other times it will not.

If a DNR order is chosen, the condition of the patient must be such that the intervention would be of no significant benefit to him or her. Sometimes out of a generalized fear of medical technology, people may decide to put a DNR in place many years before any serious medical situation arises. Without knowing the medical particulars of their own future situation, however, this would be an unwise and ill-considered step. It can also be premature to decline a full code early in the course of a progressive disease, as resuscitation might well offer a bridge to healing or to another extended period of life. As the patient’s condition worsens, though, he or she may later decide that a full code has become unreasonable, and choose a DNR at that point. These judgments are tricky to make, because the specifics of each case differ, and those specifics change with time and disease progression. DNR’s should be put in place only when the circumstances warrant it, that is to say, on a case-by-case, patient-specific basis. In other words, when CPR/resuscitation can reasonably be determined to no longer offer a hope of benefit to the patient or if it entails an excessive burden to him, at that time a DNR can be put into place.

Some of the possible burdens that may need to be considered in deciding whether to pursue resuscitative interventions for a patient would include some of the following: the risk of rib or other bone fractures, puncture of the lungs by a broken bone (or from the trauma of lung compression and decompression), bleeding in the center of the chest, cerebral dysfunction or permanent brain damage, the small risk (about 3 or 4 percent) that the patient might end up entering a vegetative state, and subsequent complications if the patient ends up staying on a ventilator for an extended period following the resuscitation.

During resuscitative efforts, elderly patients are more likely to experience complications or to have a worse outcome than CPR. Younger patients, on the other hand, tend to show a greater resilience and are often better able to tolerate CPR. Patients suffering from advanced cancer are also known to fare poorly following resuscitative efforts.

In terms of overall statistics, when a patient codes in the hospital and all resuscitative measures are taken, patients frequently do not end up leaving the hospital, especially when they are elderly or have co-occurring conditions. Based on data from the National Registry of Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation (NRCPR), studies have determined that patients who undergo cardiac arrest in the hospital have an overall survival to discharge rate of about 17 percent. The rate drops even lower (to around 13 percent) for cancer patients. In other words, the benefits are oftentimes few and short-lived, while the burdens tend to be high. There are, of course, exceptions — while many patients do not experience significant benefits from resuscitative measures, a small percentage do.

So when death is imminent, and disease states are very advanced (perhaps in the absence of multiple organ failure), and assuming other spiritual matters, such as last sacraments, have been addressed, a DNR order may not raise any moral problems. The key consideration in making the judgment will be to determine whether the benefits of resuscitation outweigh the burdens.

DNR orders can be misused, of course, if they are broadly construed as calling on medical professionals to abandon or give up. We must continue to care for them, and use the various ordinary means that they may have been relying on, such as heart and blood pressure medications, diuretics, insulin, etc.

We should always seek to do what is ethically “ordinary” or “proportionate care for our loved ones, though we are never obligated to choose anything that would be heroic, disproportionate or unduly burdensome when it comes to CPR or other resuscitative measures.

Theology teacher who is also the diocesan director of Catholic Relief Services. The students found statistics about the country — population, poverty rate, these kinds of things — and the CRS programs in place.

The students designed posters with the information they learned. These posters are hanging on the classroom doors throughout the school and will be there through the end of the year.

Students also created flags representing 55 of the 100 countries where CRS has a presence. During the prayer assembly, Father Jacob Meyer, chaplain, sang a litany of saints that pertained to the patrons of the countries represented. One student carried the flag before the student body, while another student lit a candle. The flags were then placed in the cafeteria and will eventually be placed in the school.

At the assembly, the work of CRS was highlighted. Providing wells and sanitary water was emphasized as one of the services CRS provides. Building homes, providing medical supplies are other CRS programs provided. CRS provides medical supplies are other CRS programs provided.

Charles Ehinger, who teaches senior honors physics and coordinated the committee that planned the prayer assembly, said the ideas come from the students whose actions can range from raising funds or writing to elected representatives on issues to raising funds for a group to do mission work in another country.

One Bishop Dwenger senior, Jacob Malmstrom, spent 2011 in Haiti with his parents and the family working in medical missions. In his brief presentation at the assembly of the mission work he did in Haiti, he showed the need for medical care, housing and the plight of orphans and children left at the Mission of Hope Orphanage. Some of the children are placed there, he said, because the family can no longer financially support them.

He encouraged his fellow students to “feel blessed with what you have been given.” Malmstrom plans to return to Haiti this summer with an internship program soon after he graduates in May.

Ehinger’s honors physics class studied Ethiopia. He explained that the students spent the first day learning the statistics and general information about the country — terrain, capital, population, the climate and its droughts. CRS provides facts about all the countries they serve on their website.

Ehinger said he was able to incorporate lessons of the class with the situation, for example, of the drought issues in Ethiopia: “How can we solve this?” he asked the students.

Wheeler said, next year, perhaps the biology and chemistry teachers will participate in the iNeighbor program and the classes will partner with CRS who offer videoconferences to show how they work.

Different lessons terrene available in world languages, theology or social studies classes.

The second day, the students concentrated on the country’s history. That included the history of CRS’s work in that particular country.

The third day included studies for groups that partner with CRS and the fourth day served as CRS programs to explore and the type of relief that is going on in each country.

The idea is “global awareness,” Ehinger said. “As much as teenagers are sheltered, they don’t travel far, they’re not aware of what goes on in the world. So it’s more real to them and if it’s real to them they will want to get more involved.”
