VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Francis’ first encyclical, “Lumen Fidei” (“The Light of Faith”), is a celebration of Christian faith as the guiding light of a “successful and fruitful life,” inspiring social action as well as devotion to God, and illuminating “every aspect of human existence,” including philosophy and the natural sciences.

The document, released July 5, completes a papal trilogy on the three “theological virtues,” following Pope Benedict XVI’s encyclicals “ Deus Caritas Est” (2005) on charity and “Spe Salvi” (2007) on hope. Publication of the encyclical was one of the most awaited events of the Year of Faith which began in October 2012.

Pope Benedict “had almost completed a first draft of an encyclical on faith” before his retirement in February 2013, Pope Francis writes, adding that “I have taken up his fine work and added a few contributions of my own.”

Commentators will likely differ in attributing specific passages, but the document clearly recalls the writings of Pope Benedict in its

BY FRANCIS X. ROCCA

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Francis signed a decree clearing the way for the canonization of Blessed John Paul II and has decided also to ask the world’s cardinals to vote on the canonization of Blessed John XXIII, even in the absence of a miracle.

After Pope Francis met July 5 with Cardinal Angelo Amato, prefect of the Congregation for Saints’ Causes, the Vatican published a list of decrees the pope approved related to Blessed John Paul’s canonization and 11 other sainthood causes.

Publishing the decrees, the Vatican also said, “The supreme pontiff approved the favorable votes of the ordinary session of the cardinal- and bishop-fathers regarding the canonization of Blessed John XXIII (Angelo Giuseppe Roncalli) and has decided to convoke a consistory that will also involve the canonization of Blessed John Paul II.”

Normally, after a pope signs a decree recognizing the miracle needed for a canonization, the pope consults with cardinals around the world and calls a consistory — a gathering attended by any cardinal who wants and is able to attend — where those present voice their support for the pope’s decision to proclaim a new saint.

A date for a canonization ceremony is announced formally only during or immediately after the consistory.

The cardinals and archbishops who are members of the saints’ congregation met at the Vatican July 2 and voted in favor of the pope recognizing as a miracle the healing of Floribeth Mora Diaz, a Costa Rican who was suffering from a brain aneurysm and recovered after prayers through the intercession of Blessed John Paul.

The congregation members, according to news reports, also looked at the cause of Blessed John and voted to ask Pope Francis to canonize him without requiring a miracle.

According to Church rules — established by the pope and subject to changes by him — a miracle is needed after beatification to make a candidate eligible for canonization.

Marriage redefinition: An anthropological regression

BY BISHOP KEVIN C. RHOADES

Upon hearing the news on June 26th of the Supreme Court decisions in the two Same-Sex “Marriage” Cases, I issued a public statement expressing my great disappointment on the decisions. I stated the importance of our ensuring that the state of Indiana continues to recognize and uphold the unique meaning of marriage as the union of one man and one woman. We must continue, and even redouble, our efforts to teach and advocate the truth about marriage for the good of children and of society.

The Supreme Court found the exclusion of same-sex couples legally married under state law from federal benefits (in DOMA Section 3) impermissible largely because it read DOMA as manifesting “animus” against gay people and targeting them for special disfavor. This argumentation is profoundly disturbing, suggesting that those who defend the immemorial understanding of marriage as the union of people of different sexes, ordered toward procreation, are anti-homosexual bigots. To suggest that people who support authentic marriage are prejudiced against people with same-sex attraction is disingenuous and shows a lack of tolerance and civility in this national debate. The Church affirms the dignity of all human persons and explicitly affirms that homosexual persons “must be accepted with respect, compassion, and sensitivity” (CCC 2358).

In the Proposition 8 case, the Court found that the official proponents of Proposition 8 lacked standing to defend the law from constitutional challenge on appeal. The Court did not rule on the merits of the constitutionality of Proposition 8. Unfortunately, this ruling appears to leave in place the trial court opinion which struck down Proposition 8. As a result, same-sex “marriage” will be the law in California.

We can expect that these decisions will likely trigger additional action within the three branches of federal government to expand same-sex “marriage” in our nation. I am also deeply concerned about how these decisions will affect the Church and our religious liberty.

A few years ago, Cardinal Jorge Bergoglio, the Archbishop of Buenos Aires, now Pope Francis, advocated for the authentic meaning of marriage in his native Argentina. With a marriage redefinition bill on the horizon before the Argentine legislature, the Argentinian bishops, under the leadership of Cardinal Bergoglio, issued a statement making that “the union of people of the same sex lacks the biological and anthropological elements that are proper to marriage and family.”

Being accused, like us here in the United States, of discrimination, the Argentine bishops pointed out that “the recognition of a real difference is not discrimination.” They wrote: “Nature does not discriminate when it makes us a man or a woman. Our Civil Code does not discriminate when it demands the requirement of being a man and a woman to contract marriage; it only recognizes a natural reality.

During the national debate in Argentina, Cardinal Bergoglio boldly defended marriage, the natural family, and the right of children to have a father and a mother. He wrote: “At stake is the identity and survival of the family; father, mother and children. At stake are the lives of many children who will be discriminated against in advance, and deprived of their human development given by a father and a mother and willed by God. At stake is the total rejection of God’s law engraved in our hearts.”

I’ve been reading the book On Heaven and Earth, a very interesting book of conversations between Cardinal Bergoglio and Rabbi Abraham Skorka of Argentina on a variety of theological and social issues. In their discussion of same-sex “marriage,” Cardinal Bergoglio said that he considers it an “anti-value and an anthropological regression.” He explains that this is an issue that transcends religion. He sees same-sex “marriage” as a regression, that is, “a weakening of the institution that is thousands of years old and that was forged according to nature and anthropology.”

Despite the efforts of the future Pope and the Church in Argentina, the marriage redefinition bill passed in the Senate, making Argentina the first country in Latin America to redefine marriage to include two persons of the same sex.

In Argentina, Pope Francis had to engage with a hostile culture in confronting this issue and others, just as we are doing here in the United States. Pope Francis never made derogatory comments about people with same-sex attraction. Neither do we. We have a lot of work to do to evangelize our culture on the meaning of human love, sexuality, and marriage. Our message may not be popular, but we must preach the Gospel “in season and out of season,” as Saint Paul reminds us.

We have a long journey ahead of us in today’s cultural arena to persuade people about the truth and beauty of the Church’s teaching in these areas, teachings rooted in the natural law. We must work tirelessly on the new evangelization, which includes the promotion and defense of the truth and beauty of authentic marriage and the family, the first and vital cell of society, essential to the common good.

Through the intercession of Blessed Virgin Mary and Saint Joseph, may our efforts bear good fruit in this uphill battle!
Bishop Rhoades closes fortnight with Mass at St. Matthew Cathedral

BY TRISH LINNER

SOUTH BEND — Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades closed diocesan activities of the nationwide celebration of Fortnight for Freedom with a special Mass on July 4 at St. Matthew Cathedral in South Bend. The two-week long Fortnight for Freedom is a national and local effort to educate Americans on the challenges facing religious liberties, not only in the United States, but worldwide as well.

Hundreds of faithful joined Bishop Rhoades and concelebrate Msgr. Michael Heintz for the July 4 Mass. Bishop Rhoades spoke about the nation’s history and what the Fourth of July means to the nation.

“In 1776, Catholics were a small oppressed minority in the 13 colonies, victims of anti-Catholic bias and discrimination brought about with the penal laws of England. But they joined the revolutionary struggle. They hoped that American independence would bring them religious liberty. They rejoiced when religious liberty was incorporated into the Bill of Rights in the First Amendment to the Constitution,” he said.

“We have been blessed with religious freedom, something we can never take for granted,” Bishop Rhoades noted. “It has continually needed to be guarded and defended.”

Bishop Rhoades also talked about the right to live the faith without government coercion.

“We insist upon not only the freedom to serve God and others through our schools, colleges, universities, hospitals and charities without compromising our faith and moral teachings,” he added. “Authentic religious freedom includes the freedom for individuals to live their faith in the workplace and to advocate in the public square those truths and values that flow from their faith.”

Bishop Rhoades greets those who attended the Fourth of July Mass at St. Matthew Cathedral in South Bend. The Mass closed the diocesan celebration of the Fortnight for Freedom, a national and local effort to educate Americans on the challenges facing religious liberties, not only in the United States, but worldwide as well.

The Church has been at the forefront of the fight for the right to life, the truth and meaning of marriage and religious liberty. Bishop Rhoades reminded the faithful that, “we are also standing up for the truth stated in the Declaration of Independence — that our rights come from God who created us.”

He encouraged the faithful to celebrate this nation’s independence “with authentic patriotism, that is, love for our country. Our love for God, the Church and our country motivates us in our campaign to protect religious liberty.”

He concluded the homily and said, “Today ends the Fortnight for Freedom. It does not end our prayers and efforts on behalf of religious liberty. May God, who gave us life and liberty, bless us, our nation and all peoples with renewed determination to protect these cherished gifts.”

After Mass, Bishop Rhoades thanked everyone for their attendance and wished everyone a wonderful and enjoyable Fourth of July. “What a great way to start off our nation’s holiday,” he said.

The crowd responded with loud applause to the moving words of the bishop’s homily. “I was tremendously excited to see how well the Mass was attended. The bishop’s reflection on our founding fathers and the role of the Church in protecting our religious freedom was moving,” said St. Matthew cantor Alicia Nagy.

Stephanie Vance attended the Mass with her husband Kevin and their children. She stated, “It was so refreshing to hear the bishop. Nothing else would you hear that message.”

While the Fortnight for Freedom has ended, the focus on protecting religious freedom will continue in the diocese and across the nation.

Retirement begins Aug. 1 for Father Leonard Chrobot

By Jodi Magallanes

SOUTH BEND — Father Leonard Chrobot, pastor at St. Hedwig and St. Patrick parishes, and a professor at Notre Dame University, is set to retire Aug. 1, just shy of his 50th year as a priest. He has served as part of the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend since 1964.

In addition to his parish responsibilities, Father Chrobot is a long-time educator and an advocate of the Polish-American heritage. He has been reflecting on Polish-American identity and the changes it has undergone for 40 years, he recounted to graduates of the Polish-American Research Fellowship at Notre Dame in 1989, posts he has maintained ever since.

As immigration and assimilation changed the Polish-American landscape of South Bend and the larger Midwest in the 1960s and ‘70s, Father Chrobot became a point person for the experience. He testified before the U.S. House of Representatives subcommittee on education in 1970 on behalf of the Ethnic Heritage Studies Centers Bill, which authorized $30 million to establish Ethnic Heritage Studies Centers throughout the country. The centers developed curriculum materials for use in U.S. public schools that taught the cultural heritage of major ethnic groups in the country, Orchard Lake Schools, where he served as dean during that time, had previously established several such centers.

His expertise has been called upon often and took the form of many appointments, including to the Committee on Cultural Democracy, the Michigan Department of Education, the National Coordinating Assembly on Ethnic Studies, The Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., and the American Catholic Bishops’ Commission on Liberty and Justice. He served as associate editor and associate director of the Polish American Studies periodical, on the board directors of the Association of Independent Colleges and Universities of Michigan and of the Consortium of Catholic Colleges and Universities of Michigan, and as Polish American Historical Association president from 1987-89. He has traveled across the country speaking at parishes and educational institutions about Polish-American faith, history and culture, and traveled to Poland numerous times as well in educational capacities.

In 1979 Father Chrobot cofounded the “Polish American-Jewish American National Council,” a national organization of ethnic leaders. Among his many honors are Phi Delta Kappa Outstanding Educator: Service Above Self award, Rotary Club of Dearborn Heights, Mich., the Righteous Gentile citation, Shuraat Hay layah (Holocaust Survivors) of Metropolitan Detroit; and the Fidelitas Medal, given by Sr. Cyril and Methodius Seminary to him on May 7, 2005. He was invited to the White House again in 1993 as a guest of the U.S. State Department and Vice-President Al Gore for the 50th anniversary of the Warsaw Jewish Ghetto Uprising.

Father Chrobot had the honor of meeting Blessed Pope John Paul II several times. They became acquainted first when Blessed John Paul II was archbishop in Poland, and met again in 1976 when a delegation of some 20 bishops, led by then-Cardinal Wojtyla, came to Orchard Lake.

The real measure of the success of a parish is the growth in “wisdom and grace before God and before man” of its people, Father Chrobot believes. However, the physical changes are more visible, and several took place during his tenure as pastor of the two parishes for the last dozen years. Although he enjoys cooking and gardening, Father Chrobot said he also hopes to spend some of his retirement hours in South Bend developing his writings.
WASHINGTON (CNS) — The federal Defense of Marriage Act, or DOMA, defining marriage as between one man and one woman, is unconstitutional under the Equal Protection Clause, the Supreme Court ruled June 26 in a 5-4 opinion.

In a separate case, the court sent back lower courts a challenge to California’s Proposition 8, the voter-approved initiative barring same-sex marriage. The appeal result is that a constitutional marriage again will be legal in California as soon that the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals formally dismisses the case, as the high court instructed it.

In this second 5-4 ruling, with a different lineup of justices, the court remanded the case on the grounds that the individuals who defended the law in court lacked legal standing to do so.

Neither decision will have the effect of requiring states to honor same-sex marriages from other jurisdictions, but the DOMA case likely will affect how the federal government must treat same-sex marriages for purposes ranging from Social Security benefits to taxation, immigration and benefits for military spouses.

The opinion by Justice Anthony Kennedy blasted the law as having “the avowed purpose and practical effect . . . to impose a disadvantage, a separate status, and so a stigma upon all who enter into same-sex marriages made lawful by the unquestioned authority of the states. . . ." The act’s demonstrated purpose is to ensure that if any state decides to recognize same-sex marriages, those unions will be treated as second-class marriages for purposes of federal law," Kennedy wrote. “This raises a most serious question under the Constitution’s Fifth Amendment.

Kennedy was joined in the ruling by Justices Stephen G. Breyer, Ruth Bader Ginsburg, Sonia Sotomayor and Elena Kagan. Chief Justice John Roberts wrote a dissent, arguing that the court should not have jurisdiction to rule in the case and that DOMA was constitutional. Justices Antonin Scalia and Samuel Alito also wrote dissents. Justice Clarence Thomas joined Alito’s dissent and Roberts joined part of Scalia’s. The 6th Circuit Court of Appeals had allowed same-sex married couples to bring two by two who were denied marriage licenses and the state’s voters in 2008 approved a constitutional amendment limiting marriage to heterosexual couples. The law was passed after the state Supreme Court ruled earlier that year that statutes barring same-sex marriage were unconstitutional.

After a federal District Court found that Prop 8 served no legitimate purpose and violates due process and the equal protection rights of same-sex couples to marry, the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld that conclusion, although on a narrower legal finding. While litigation proceeded, Prop 8’s ban on same-sex marriages was allowed to stand.

The state of California declined to defend Prop 8 when two couples sued to block it, so individuals who supported the law took up its defense.

In an opinion written by Roberts, the Supreme Court ruled that those individuals lacked the legal standing to defend the law in federal court. The effect of the decision appears to be that the California trial court’s ruling that Prop 8 is unconstitutional will stand, at least initially. That would allow same-sex marriages to resume in California.

In an opinion written by Kennedy, California Gov. Jerry Brown directed his state Department of Public Health, which oversees marriage, to tell county officials to issue marriage licenses to same-sex couples as soon as the 9th Circuit lifts its temporary restraining order. The 9th Circuit was to rule on the case July 14.

The appeal result is that a constitutional marriage again will be legal in California as soon that the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals formally dismisses the case, as the high court instructed it.

The June 26 ruling did not address that provision of the law.

Lower courts had upheld Proposition 8’s argument that the law is unconstitutional. DOMA had the support of the administrations of Presidents Bill Clinton and George W. Bush. President Barack Obama. But in 2011, the Justice Department announced that the attorney general had determined that Section 3 is unconstitutional — that is, legally mandated same-sex spouses. The administration said federal agencies should continue to enforce the law, but that the government would no longer defend it in court.

The case to uphold DOMA was taken up by a group of members of Congress, known as the Bipartisan Legal Advisory Group of the U.S. House of Representatives. The U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, other religious groups and various organizations opposed to same-sex marriage had more than 300 people supporting the law, which uphold the traditional definition of marriage.

In 32 states, constitutional amendments or state laws ban same-sex marriage, while 12 states and the District of Columbia recognize such marriages. Another eight states recognize civil unions or domestic partnerships, with some having overlapping bans on same-sex marriage.

U.S. bishops view Supreme Court’s rulings as ‘tragic day for marriage’

WASHINGTON (CNS) — U.S. Catholic bishops said the U.S. Supreme Court’s June 26 rulings on same-sex marriage were a “tragic day for marriage and for our nation.”

The court, in separate 5-4 rulings struck down the federal Defense of Marriage Act, or DOMA, defining marriage as between one man and one woman and also refused to rule on the merits of a challenge to California’s Proposition 8, the voter-approved initiative banning same-sex marriage.

In the rulings, the court said DOMA was unconstitutional under the Equal Protection Clause and they sent back lower courts to a challenge to Prop 8, saying the individuals who defended the law in court lacked legal standing to do so.

Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades expressed his great disappointment on the decisions of the Supreme Court striking down the part of the Defense of Marriage Act and refusing to uphold California’s Proposition 8. “Under the Court’s ruling regarding DOMA, the federal government will now have to recognize so-called same-sex marriage in states that provide for it,” Bishop Rhoades reported in a statement on the June 26 rulings.

Bishop Rhoades stated the importance of “ensuring that the Church must continue and even redouble its efforts to teach and advocate the truth about marriage for the good of children and of society.”

A statement by Cardinal Timothy M. Dolan of New York, president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, and Archbishop Salvatore J. Cordileone of San Francisco, chair of the U.S. bishops’ Subcommittee for the Promotion and Defense of Marriage, said the court “has dealt a profound injustice to the American people by striking down in part the federal Defense of Marriage Act.”

“The court got it wrong,” they continued. “The federal government must respect the truth that marriage is the union of one man and one woman, even where states fail to do so. The preservation of liberty and justice require the federal and state, respect the truth, including the truth about marriage.”

The bishops also said it was “unfortunate that the court did not take the opportunity to uphold California’s Proposition 8 but instead decided not to rule on the matter. The common good of all, especially our children, depends upon a society that strives to uphold the truth of marriage. Now is the time to redouble our efforts in witness to this truth.”

They urged people “to stand steadfastly together in promoting and defending the unique meaning of marriage: one man, one woman, for life.” They also asked for prayers “as the court’s decisions are reviewed and their implications further fleshed out.”

Baltimore Archbishop William E. Lori said the court’s decisions were the “latest in a troubling trend of decisions regarding DOMA, the federal constitution and the rights of those who support marriage between one man and one woman.”

“The church and state are called to present the truth in a loving and respectful way,” he said. “If the voice of the church and state is muted or shut down, what will happen to the voice of the conscience of the people.”
Shepherds United speak in defense of marriage

BY TIM JOHNSON

FORT WAYNE — Pastors, priests and ministers who comprise Shepherds United held a rally July 1 on the lawn of the Allen County Courthouse to uphold traditional marriage.

Joined by hundreds attending the lunchtime marriage rally, clergy from various churches in the Fort Wayne area spoke on the biblical, societal and religious freedom implications of governmental attempts to redefine marriage.

On June 26, the day the U.S. Supreme Court issued rulings on the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA) and California’s Proposition 8, three of the Shepherds United pastors, including Father Jason Freiburger, diocesan vice chancellor, read a statement in a news conference at the Archbishop Noll Catholic Center.

Though the Supreme Court’s rulings on DOMA and California’s Proposition 8 come as no surprise, they are disappointing,” said Rev. Otha Aden, pastor at Southern Heights Baptist Church in Fort Wayne. “As Christian pastors, priests and ministers we believe that God Himself instituted marriage — long before our nation began — as the life-long union of one man and one woman. In fact, Jesus Himself reminded us that “...at the beginning the Creator “made them male and female,” and said, “For this reason a man will leave his father and mother and be united to his wife, and the two will become one flesh (Mt 19:4-5).” That’s why as followers of Christ, Christians are conscience-bound to declare marriage as the union of one man and one woman, no matter what the courts or legislatures may say. Defending the truth is more important than personal popularity.

Marriage is a fundamental building block of society and it is the only societal institution that binds parents to their offspring, said Father Jason Freiburger. “Men and women are equal but not interchangeable. Indeed, only from the coming together of one man and one woman are children created and it is in this relationship that a child is given the best opportunity to grow and thrive.”

“Men and women complement one another physically, psychologically and emotionally. Only a man can be a father and only a woman can be a mother,” shared Rev. Peter Gregory, associate pastor at St. Paul’s Evangelical Lutheran Church in Fort Wayne. “Every child benefits from the nurturing of a mother and the leadership of a father. While having one mother is a blessing, having two mothers or two fathers is confusing for the child and detrimental to his or her well-being.”

At the marriage rally on July 1, Franciscan Father David Mary Engo of the Franciscan Brothers Minor was one of several speakers who represented various denominations. Father Engo first told those who gathered at the rally in opposition and who define themselves as gay, heterosexual and have same-sex attraction, “We want you to know we are not here as your enemy. We are here as your brothers and sisters, and we love you with the love of Christ Jesus. We are commanded by Christ to love and so we love you. We are here to uphold your dignity. We are here to proclaim your dignity. We are here to tell you that you are worth the death of Our Lord, Jesus Christ.”

In his brief talk Father Engo noted, “Our country is very confused right now, and it is coming out in the courts.”

He said the country is trying to define marriage as something other than one man and one woman, “and we have no right to redefine marriage,” he emphasized as the crowd erupted into a loud applause. Marriage, he said, is not a human institution, but a divine institution.

The U.S. traces its historical beginnings in faith. Right now, Father Engo said, the U.S. is not just facing the redefinition of marriage between one man and one woman, “we are also facing the loss of our culture, the loss of the soul of our country. The fight is on, the battle is on for the soul of our country.”

He encouraged all to read and listen carefully to what’s being said, how it is being said, “and how this will affect us as Christians.”

Archbishops reflect on the meaning of the pallium

BY CINDY WOODEN

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Making a pilgrimage to Rome with members of their flock, 34 archbishops named in the past year knelt by St. Peter’s tomb until the Mass in St. Peter’s Basilica.

The palliums are about 3 inches wide and have a 14-inch strip hanging down the front and the back. The strips are finished with black, almost like the hooves of the sheep the archbishop is symbolically carrying over his shoulders.

Archbishop Jackels, one of the first bishops appointed by Pope Francis, told Catholic News Service, “To be quite honest, I was kind of hoping that maybe he would send the pallium by way of FedEx and say, ‘Save the money and give it to the poor.’”

“This notion of the lambs’ wool being placed over the shoulders of an archbishop is reminiscent of Jesus, the good shepherd, carrying the sheep back to the fold,” he said. It reminded him of Pope Francis’ talk to nuncios a week earlier about the qualities they should look for when suggesting candidates for his name as bishops: “someone who is patient, gentle, merciful, like that image of the Good Shepherd carrying His sheep.”

Archbishop Tobin said he was “a little dazed” kneeling in front of the pope; “all I could stammer out in Spanish was, ‘You can count on us’.”

As archbishop of Indianapolis, he said he tries to help the pope in his mission of unity by “trying to keep our people connected” to one another, but especially to the needs of Catholics around the world.

“A disturbing thing I find returning to the United States,” after years of service as the head of the Redemptorists and then as secretary of the Vatican congregation for religious, “is just how forgetful the news media is of the world beyond America’s shores or beyond the latest scandal of a movie star, politician or priest.”

“By keeping our people connected with the Holy Father and with the center of the Catholic Church, we’re also being connected with the world,” he said.
Senate immigration bill passes, moves to uncertain fate in House

BY PATRICIA ZAPOR

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The diverse coalition of faith, labor, business and civil rights activists who are trying to rework the nation’s immigration system celebrated the June 27 Senate passage of a massive reform bill.

The bill moves to the House, where Speaker John Boehner has said he would not allow it on the floor unless a majority of Republicans support it, which they do not. Instead, the House is taking a piecemeal approach, with separate bills focusing first on border security.

In a 68 to 32 vote, the Senate passed S. 744, the Border Security, Economic Competitiveness, and Immigration Modernization Act, which would massively ramp up enforcement on the southern border, adding 700 miles of fencing and doubling the number of Border Patrol agents, to the tune of $46.3 billion.

The bill also provides a path to citizenship under the DREAM Act; temporary workers; family reunification immigration, for farm labor; and to the president to sign into law, some 10,000 new agents, to the tune of $46.3 billion.

A group of immigrants and activists for immigration reform chant as they march on Capitol Hill in Washington June 26 to urge Congress to act on immigration reform. The U.S. Senate overwhelmingly passed a comprehensive immigration reform bill June 27.

Among those commending the passage of S. 744, the Border Security, Economic Competitiveness, and Immigration Modernization Act, was the bishops of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, who said the Senate bill is consistent with the key principles of common-sense reform that the bishops disagree with elements of the bill, particularly “the unprecedented buildup of enforcement resources along the southern border, they see the legislation as an overall improvement upon the status quo.”

In a statement, the bishops said the current system causes much suffering among immigrants and their families. They called the Senate bill “would allow immigrants and their families to come out of the shadows and into the light and would protect families from separation.”

Among changes to the legislation that the archbishops said the USCCB would seek as the House proceeds are making the path to citizenship “more accessible and achievable.”

Traveling in Africa, President Barack Obama in a statement thanked the bipartisan “gang of eight” senators who wrote the bill and those who crossed party lines to pass it.

He said that as a compromise measure, “nobody got everything they wanted. Not Democrats. Not Republicans. Not me. But the Senate bill is consistent with the key principles for common-sense reform that I — and many others — have repeatedly laid out.”

He called the bill’s border security plan the most aggressive in history. Its provisions also would provide an economic boost to the country. Often he urged people who care about the issue to keep a watchful eye as the bill proceeds.

“Now is the time when opponents will try their hardest to pull this bipartisan effort apart so they can stop common-sense reform from becoming a reality,” the president said. “We cannot let that happen.”

Obama added that “the clear majority of Americans who support reform — from CEOs to labor leaders, law enforcement to clergy” should reach out to members of Congress and urge them to “pass commonsense reform so that our businesses and workers are all playing by the same rules and everyone who’s in this country is paying their fair share in taxes.”

Some groups working for comprehensive reform were blunt about what they consider the shortcomings of S. 744.

United We Dream, an organization of young adults who lack legal status because they were brought to the U.S. as children, issued a statement from coordinating committee member Evelyn Rivera, whose mother was deported six years ago after a traffic stop.

“We are deeply disappointed by the compromises that negotiators agreed to in order to secure additional Republican support for the bill,” Rivera said in the statement. “We know these deals will only add to the pain DREAMers and our parents have experienced from border militarization and record deportations.”

She lamented that “as the debate unfolds GOP leaders kept moving the goalposts, insisting on more and more wasteful and excessive border security measures and launching attacks on our families.”

“DREAMers are here to say to every single politician: We’re watching. No more. Enough is enough,” she said.

The Detention Watch Network said that although the bill includes some positive provisions related to detention, the inclusion of an amendment to “dramatically expand border militarization and unprecedented levels of enforcement” will “bring the shadow of militarization to America.”

It said some welcome reforms to detention provisions in the bill are overshadowed by “a vast expansion of enforcement that will lead to more immigrants being funneled into detention and processed for deportation” and will exclude people with criminal convictions from the legal process and triple criminal prosecutions for border crossers.

Being in the country without permission is a civil offense not a criminal one, though repeat border crossers are increasingly prosecuted under criminal statutes, making it nearly impossible for them to ever immigrate legally.

As advocates gear up for the next part of the effort to get a bill approved and to the president to sign into law, some planned to start with prayer.

In Chicago, the archdiocese’s evangelization migrant program planned a Mass of thanksgiving for June 30 to recognize the bill’s passage. The archdiocese has collected 100,000 postcards to send to Congress in support of immigration reform.

Leith Anderson, president, National Association of Evangelicals, said after passing for bipartisan Senate legislation, “now it’s time to pray for bipartisan immigration legislation in the House.”

(The Rev. Jim Wallis, president and CEO of Sojourners, said the principles of the Senate bill “are drawn from the heart of the Gospel welcoming ‘the stranger’ Jesus commands, protecting families as Christians must do, respecting the rule of law as Christians are biblically asked to do, and fixing and healing a broken immigration system that has shattered the lives of 11 million people, whom the Bible tells us to defend and serve.”

Wallis said “the meaning of the Gospel in our times is at stake in this long-overdue effort to repair our corrupt and cruel immigration system.”

And the promise of an earned path to citizenship is in the best tradition of American democracy and diversity.

Robert Gehrke, president of Conservatives for Comprehensive Immigration Reform, said for the faith community, particularly those in the coalition known as the Evangelical Immigration Table, the vote “was a serious step toward a long-overdue effort to repair our corrupt and cruel immigration system.”

The archdiocese has collected 100,000 postcards to send to Congress in support of immigration reform.

Archdiocese of Cincinnati, said on behalf of Archbishop Dennis M. Schnurr that the bill, though imperfect, “is a step forward in finally establishing some law and order to our broken system and respecting the rights and family unity of immigrants.”

“Echoing the position of our bishops, thousands of Catholics throughout the archdiocese have asked our senators to support such reforms. By the end of this year, we hope to have an improved immigration system that restores order and promotes human dignity,” he said.

Catholics urged to speak truth 'with love' in religious freedom fight

WASHINGTON (CNS) — As people of faith and as Americans, the nation’s Catholics should kneel in prayer and also stand in defense of religious freedom, Washington Cardinal Donald W. Wuerl said July 4 during the closing Mass for the Fortnight for Freedom at the Basilica of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception in Washington. “There is a time to be on one’s knees. There is also a time to stand up... Today, there are things that should mean enough to all of us, including our religious liberty, that we simply need to stand — to stand up for what is right, to stand up for what is ours, to stand up for freedom of religion,” the cardinal said. The cardinal said that American Catholics, through their faith and love, can change the world and make it a better place. “It begins with all of us having the courage to stand for what we believe ... (to stand up) for our faith and freedom.” The Mass marked the close of the second annual Fortnight for Freedom, a two-week period in which the nation’s bishops called on Catholics across the country to pray and act in defense of religious freedom. Dioceses across the U.S. celebrated Masses, held prayer services and organized marches and other events to mark the close of the fortnight, which began June 21, the vigil of the feast of Sts. Thomas More and John Fisher, who were martyred for their faith. In Washington, the liturgy — televised nationally by EWTN — drew an overflow crowd of 5,500 people and was concelebrated by five bishops and 72 priests.

Director, deputy director of Vatican bank resign

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The director and the deputy director of the Vatican bank, which is being investigated by a special papal commission, resigned July 1. A statement from the Vatican press office said Director Paolo Cipriani and Massimo Tulli, deputy director, offered their resignations “in the best interest of the institute and the Holy See.” The bank has been working to revamp a marred image of secrecy and scandal with greater transparency. The resignations came two days after the arrest of Msgr. Nunzio Scarano, an accountant in the Administration of the Patrimony of the Holy See, the Vatican office that oversees Vatican property and investments. The administration is not part of the Vatican bank, although Msgr. Scarano — who is accused of fraud, corruption and slander — was believed to have at least one personal account at the bank, and Italian investigators claim they have wiretaps of him speaking to Tulli on several occasions. The Vatican’s July 1 statement said Ernst von Freyberg, the Vatican bank president, would assume the function of interim general director, effective immediately.

Catholic presence at Battle of Gettysburg still evident 150 years later

By Lou Baldwin

PHILADELPHIA (CNS) — They were Poles, Austrians, Germans, Czechs, Italians, Irish — especially Irish — and they had(/^){10} been in common. They were Catholics, many of them new immigrants but loyal Americans.

Seven score and 10 years ago, as President Abraham Lincoln might say, many of them participated in the crucial Battle of Gettysburg July 1-3, 1863, and some of them are among the honored dead Lincoln memorialized one year later in his famous address.

Certainly Catholicism was still a minority religion in 19th-century America, but Catholics were there. Just exactly how many of them fought at Gettysburg is impossible to say, according to Anthony Waskie, a Temple University professor and member of St. Laurentius Parish in Philadelphia, who is the principal author of “Philadelphia and the Civil War: Arsenal of the Holy See,” published in 2011.

Religion was not a statistic kept by the military, and one of the best determinants is the nationality of the soldiers who comprised a unit. One of the most famous such units was the Irish Brigade which in 1862 participated in several battles including Antietam, Md., and Fredericksburg, Va.

By 1863 at the time of Gettysburg, the brigade was commanded by Brig. Gen. Patrick Kelly, a New Yorker who later was killed at the siege of Petersburg, Va. “Three of the regiments were from New York, one was from Boston and one was from Pennsylvania,” Waskie explained. “The Pennsylvania regiment was the 116th led by Col. St. Clair Mulholland. He was an Irish immigrant and quite well educated. He was the recipient of the Medal of Honor for the Battle of Chancellorsville (in Virginia).”

Eventually he would rise to the rank of major general in the volunteer service. After the war he became active in Philadelphia politics and was Philadelphia’s chief of police, and he is buried in Old Cathedral Cemetery.

The Boston regiment brought a chaplain with them to Gettysburg — Holy Cross Father William Corby. A memorable event of the battle was Father Corby standing on a rock giving his Irish troops general absolution. Years later, through the efforts of Mulholland, a statue showing Father Corby giving absolution was erected on the rock where he stood.

A little while after the war the priest was named president of what was then Notre Dame College, in South Bend, Ind. A duplicate statue was later erected on the campus.

Another Catholic presence at Gettysburg were about a dozen Daughters of Charity, there to nurse the wounded. “They had a priest with them, Father Francis Burlando, a Vincentian,” Waskie said.

In Gettysburg, St. Francis Xavier Church became a battlefield hospital. Today Gettysburg is part of the Harrisburg Diocese, which was established in 1868.

Stained-glass windows in the church depict scenes of wounded soldiers being cared for by nuns. The celebration of an outdoor field Mass commemorating the dead and wounded has long been a tradition of the parish.

New York Cardinal Timothy M. Dolan, who is a history buff, celebrated an evening Mass at the church July 6 to mark the 150th anniversary of the battle.

For the most part the Catholic sisters did not nurse the wounded on the battlefield, but in the huge military hospitals that sprang up both in the North and the South. While many congregations supplied sister-nurses during the conflict, the Daughters of Charity were the most active, even to the point of temporarily closing schools for lack of remaining teaching sisters.

In Philadelphia, there was the Satterlee Military Hospital (1862-65) in West Philadelphia and in Chestnut Hill the Mower Military Hospital (1863-65).

By comparison, both were larger than the four largest hospitals combined in today’s Philadelphia. Shortly after the Satterlee opened, Sister Mary Gonzaga Grace, assigned by her order to St. Joseph’s Orphan Asylum in Philadelphia, was asked to take charge of the Daughters of Charity who would serve as nurses at the hospital.

Initially there were 42 sisters; over the next three years the total number of sisters who served at the hospital at various times was 91.

When the sisters arrived, the newly constructed hospital had about 900 patients. Within a couple of months that rose to 1,500 especially after the Battle of Second Bull Run in Virginia.

The real trial came after Gettysburg, when the hospital population rose to more than 5,000 with the overflow housed in tents. One sister, Sister Margaret Hamilton, wrote, “When they arrived the hospital and many wards were full of vermin and in many cases gangrene had set in. The odor was almost unbearable. The demand on our time and labor was so increased that the number of nurses seemed utterly inadequate and the hospital presented a pure picture of the horrors of war.”

Most amazing of the more than 6,000 that passed through Satterlee Hospital in the month or so after Gettysburg, only 110 died.
Permanent shrine for St. Mother Theodore Guérin at Saint Mary-of-the-Woods created

SAINT MARY-OF-THE-WOODS — The Sisters of Providence of Saint Mary-of-the-Woods have raised the money to create the permanent shrine for St. Mother Theodore Guérin. However, fundraising continues for an additional $250,000 to complete phase one of the project. This phase includes renovation to Providence Spirituality and Conference Center related to the shrine work.

Renaovation of current facilities to make way for the shrine’s new home is expected to be completed by fall of 2014. The museum-like area, complete with educational displays, will be located below the Blessed Sacrament Chapel in the hallway adjacent to the Church of the Immaculate Conception. Currently, the area is used for office and workspace.

Creating the shrine brings the need to relocate some offices and modify several of the venues at Providence Center and to expand The Gift Shop at Providence Center. Those projects will not begin until funds have been raised.

Those making a donation by Aug. 31 to complete phase one of the project will be considered a “founder” of the shrine and their names will be inscribed in a special journal to be displayed in the shrine area. To make a donation call the Sisters of Providence Office of Congregational Advancement at (812) 535-2801, or visit www.SistersofProvidence.org.

Documentary on brothers’ vocation in production

NOTRE DAME — For two weeks Holy Cross Brother Nich Perez has filmed the Holy Cross brothers at Holy Cross College, Columbia Hall, Schubert Hall and Holy Cross Village in Notre Dame. The footage, “Bro: Men with Hope to Bring,” is for all audiences, catering to people who are searching for meaning, people from any race or religion who can understand the language of hope and community. “It is a film about the brothers made by a brother,” said Brother Perez, a communications instructor at Holy Cross College.

Prior to filming in Indiana, Brother Perez, who is writer, director and editor of the documentary, and his crew had previously shot footage of Holy Cross brothers in Ghana, India and Brazil, giving the documentary a decidedly international flare. The Holy Cross brothers in Bangladesh also contributed footage for the documentary. Although many Holy Cross brothers are featured in the 90-minute documentary, “Bro: Men with Hope to Bring” is about the wider vocation of religious brothers in the Church, a vocation the documentary’s tailor characterizes as “the best-kept secret of the Catholic Church.”

Following this week of filming, Brother Perez and the crew are moving on to more filming in Chicago, Detroit, Austin, San Antonio and then New Orleans. Their hope is to complete the first cut of the film by October and then have a final cut done by December in order to be ready to submit to the 2014 film festivals.

Saint Mary’s College and Elkhart Community Schools announce partnership

NOTRE DAME — Saint Mary’s College has announced a partnership with Elkhart Community Schools (ECS) to help create a dynamic and sustained Laboratory School Network for the summer months. The three-year partnership is made possible through a grant provided by the Elkhart County Community Foundation. Indiana University-South Bend has entered into a similar partnership with Elkhart Community Schools. The mission of the Laboratory School Network is to simultaneously support learning for ECS students and the professional development for pre-service teachers from Saint Mary’s College and Indiana University-South Bend.

Saint Mary’s is operating its lab school out of Cleveland Elementary School in Elkhart. This year’s six-week lab began on Monday, June 10. An ECS school principal oversees the program at Cleveland and two ECS teachers, who are Saint Mary’s education alumnae, serve as the mentor teachers. Ten rising seniors in the Saint Mary’s education program or recent alumnae serve as teachers in the lab. About 150 ECS students are enrolled in the program at Cleveland Elementary.

This is an exciting opportunity for both the children who are participating in the program as well as for our Saint Mary’s teachers and teacher candidates. Children will engage in learning experiences designed to reduce or eliminate summer learning loss. The teachers will gain valuable experience as they integrate reading, writing and math instruction with hands-on science activities based on assessment data,” said Professor Mary Ann McGowan, chair of the Department of Education at Saint Mary’s College.

Traxler also noted the unique opportunity for beginning teachers to work with mentor teachers who are Saint Mary’s alumnae.

During the course of the summer, the ECS students will make a field trip to Saint Mary’s College to develop college and career awareness. In addition to a summer stipend, the recent Saint Mary’s graduates will have the opportunity to be interviewed for teaching positions within the Elkhart school system.

USF hosting Cougar Classic golf outing

FORT WAYNE — The University of Saint Francis Office of Athletics will host its second annual golf outing, the Cougar Classic, on Friday, Aug. 2, at Bridgwater Golf Club in Auburn.

At a recent award ceremony at Sacred Heart School, Warsaw, Dawson Vilamaa and Anna Sullivan were awarded the Michael Grant O’Connell Memorial Award. This award was presented in memory of 2nd Lt. Michael Grant O’Connell, who was killed in action during active duty in 1969 in Vietnam. For over 30 years, two outstanding students from Sacred Heart School have been honored in O’Connell’s memory.

The six-week summer program will include dance/movement, stories, theatre, percussion and music (instrumental and voice) activities. To participate, create a template for next year’s Jesters performance and send it to smyr@usf.edu. The program is free to anyone with a disability, regardless of his or her involvement with the traditional Jesters program and will annually September through March.

Sponsored by USF since its founding in 1978, the Jesters is a performing group of people with mild to severe developmental/physical disabilities. Each year, the program provides 20 weeks of creative programming and 150 arts activities. Each spring, the Jesters program culminates in an original multi-media performance. The event strength of the Jesters is to enhance quality of life for people with disabilities by engaging them in the creative arts.

To participate in the Jesters summer program contact Molly McGowan in the School of Creative Arts at mmcgowan@usf.edu. Include the name and age of the participant with email and phone number, or call (260) 399-7700, ext. 8001. Director Allison Ballard can be contacted at abl@usf.edu or phone program information at allis2z@yahoo.com or (260) 745-3107.
Pope calls for repentance over treatment of migrants

BY CINDY WOODEN

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Before saying a word publicly, Pope Francis made the sign of the cross and tossed a wreath of white and yellow flowers into the Mediterranean Sea in memory of the estimated 20,000 African immigrants who have died in the past 25 years trying to reach a new life in Europe.

Just a few hours before Pope Francis arrived on the Italian island of Lampedusa July 8, the Italian coast guard accompanied another boat carrying immigrants to the island’s port.

The 165 immigrants, one of whom said they were originally from Mali, had spent two days at sea making the crossing from North Africa; the immigrants were accompanied to a government reception center, a locked facility where 112 people — half under the age of 18 — already were being housed. Most will be repatriated, although a few may receive refugee status.

In his homily at an outdoor Mass, Pope Francis said he decided to visit Lampedusa, a small island with a population of 6,000 and just 70 miles from Tunisia, after seeing newspaper headlines in June describing the drowning of immigrants at sea.

“Those boats, instead of being a means of hope, were a means of death,” he said.

Wearing purple vestments, like those used during Lent, and using the prayers from the Mass for the Forgiveness of Sin, Pope Francis said the deaths of the immigrants are “like a thorn in the heart,” which spurred him to offer public prayers for them, but also to try to awaken people’s consciences.

“Who is responsible for the blood of these brothers and sisters of ours?” the pope asked in his homily. “All of us. We have nothing to do with it. It was others, certainly not me. Today no one feels responsible for this,” he said. “We have lost a sense of fraternal responsibility” and are acting like those in the Gospel who saw the man who had been beaten, robbed and left on the road half dead, but they kept walking.

“Maybe we think, ‘Oh, poor soul,’ but we continue on our way,” the pope said.

“The culture of well-being, which leads us to think only of ourselves, makes us insensitive to the cries of others,” Pope Francis said, adding that the globalization of the world’s economy in many cases has led to “the globalization of indifference.”

Still, the pope praised the many Lampedusa residents, as well as the volunteers and public security officers who do what they can to help the migrants who reach their shores.

Traditionally fishers and tourism operators, the people of Lampedusa have spent decades dealing with the impact of immigrant arrivals and political battles over immigration policies.

When the seas are calm, especially when there are wars and political upheaval in northern Africa, the desperate pay traffickers to give them a place on a boat bound for Europe. Usually the boats are recklessly and dangerously overcrowded.

After getting off the coast guard boat that took him to sea, Pope Francis personally greeted more than 50 immigrants. One of them, speaking in Arabic, told the pope that he and his fellow travelers had dealt with several traffickers before reaching Italy.

Pope Francis told the crowd at Mass that the traffickers “exploit the poverty of others” and are “people for whom the poverty of others is a source of income.”

The Mass was filled with reminders that Lampedusa is now synonymous with dangerous attempts to reach Europe: the altar was built over a small boat; the pastotoral staff the pope used was carved in wood recycled from a sunk wrecked boat; the lectern was made from old wood as well and had a ship’s wheel mounted on the front; and even the chalice — although lined with silver — was carved from the wood of a wrecked boat.

“Who among us has wept” for the immigrants, for the dangers they faced and for the thousands who died at sea, the pope asked. “The globalization of indifference has taken from us the ability to weep.”

“Let us ask the Lord for the grace to weep over our indifference, to weep over the cruelty in the world, in ourselves, and even in those who anonymously make socio-economic decisions that open the way to tragedies like this,” Pope Francis said.

Explaining why he chose a penitential liturgy, the pope said, “we ask forgiveness for our indifference to so many brothers and sisters” and for the ways in which well-being has “anesthetized our hearts.”

In addition, the pope prayed for the forgiveness of “those, who with their decisions at the global level, have created situations that lead to these tragedies.”

The United Nations has criticized Italy for conditions at the Lampedusa reception center, which it says holds at least 900 people. The United Nations also has questioned the quick pace of Italian processing, which sees only a handful of immigrants being given refugee status and the rest being flown back to Libya — the usual embarkation point — within a matter of days.

At the same time, other European countries have complained that Italy does not patrol the European borders well enough to keep out immigrants who do not have legal permission to enter their countries.

Giuseppi Nicolini, Lampedusa’s mayor, told reporters he hoped Pope Francis’ visit would “change history. Europe, with its migration policies, has avoided the problem up until now, pretending not to see the immense tragedy of the voyages of hope across the Mediterranean.”

The pope, she said, “has made the invisible visible, restoring to the migrants the dignity which countries always have denied them.”

A wreath is tossed into the Mediterranean Sea by Pope Francis off the coast of Lampedusa, Italy, July 8. During his visit to the island, the pope memorialized an estimated 20,000 African immigrants who have died in the past 25 years trying to reach a new life in Europe.

Richard Garnett speaks about religious liberty at St. Matthew Cathedral fortnight event

BY ANN CAREY

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The final rules issued by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services implementing its mandate that employers provide coverage of contraceptives do not eliminate “the need to continue defending our rights in Congress and the courts,” said New York Cardinal Timothy M. Dolan in a July 3 statement.

The cardinal, president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, noted that the bishops’ conference “has not completed its analysis of the final rule,” but he said “some basic elements of the final rule have already come into focus.”

He listed three concerns with the HHS final rule issued June 28, which updates the proposed rules it issued in February and had left open for comments through April.

He said his concerns were about the narrow definition of those “religious employers” exempt from contraceptive coverage requirements; the accommodation of religious ministries excluded from that definition; and the treatment of businesses run by people who seek to operate their companies according to religious principles.

The HHS contraceptive mandate, part of the Affordable Care Act, will require most employers, including religious employers, to provide coverage of contraceptives, sterilization and some abortion-inducing drugs free of charge, even if the employer is morally opposed to such services. It includes an exemption for some religious employers that fit its criteria.

In the final HHS rules, contraceptive coverage for accredited religious organizations with health insurance plans will be provided separately through health insurance companies or third-party administrators who must ensure that payments for contraceptive services come from outside the objecting organization’s premiums. For self-insuring institutions, a third-party administrator would provide or arrange the services, paid for through reductions in federally facilitated-exchange user fees associated with their health insurance provider.

HHS, which is headed by Secretary Kathleen Sebelius, acknowledged in its final rules that it had received many comments urging the agency to extend the exemption to include nonprofit social employers and for-profit employers who have religious objections to providing contraceptive coverage.

The mandate does not include a conscience clause for employers who object to such coverage on moral grounds.

Cardinal Dolan said the bishops are “concerned as Constitution as产值 — not just for the full range of its institutional forms, but also for the faithful in their daily lives — to carry out the mission and ministry of Jesus Christ.”

The administration’s final rules also stipulated a separate accommodation for nonprofit religious organizations — including charities, hospitals and universities — that will not have to “contract, arrange, pay, or refer for contraceptive coverage” that they object to on religious grounds.

To qualify for the accommodation, organizations must self-certify as nonprofit religious group with religious objections to contraceptive coverage. These organizations must provide their health insurance companies with proof of their self-certification and insurance companies in turn would notify women in the health plan that contraceptive coverage would be provided separately and at no cost to them.

Regarding the rules’ narrow definition of religious employers and the lack of accommodation for religious business owners, Cardinal Dolan said there is little change in those areas since the proposed rules were first issued in February.

He noted that the bishops at that time expressed “health concerns” and that the proposed rules “actually made matters more troubling by preventing dioceses and other exempt employers from insuring and paying for contraception that the employer refuses to provide to the employees of service ministries that are not exempt.”

He said the bishops also stressed that the proposed rules, like earlier versions, “made no provision at all for individuals and for-profit businesses.”

“Because the final rule remains the same in these areas, so do our concerns,” he said in the July 3 statement.

Cardinal Dolan also addressed concerns with regard to insured and self-insured health insurance plans.

For insured plans, he said the proposed rules would have established separate insurance policies for coverage of sterilization, contraception, and abortifacients which the bishops objected to in comments submitted to the HHS on the proposed rules.

Regarding self-insured plans, the cardinal said the final rules treat the employer’s very act of objecting to coverage of sterilization, contraception and abortifacients as the legal authorization for a third-party administrator to secure the objectionable coverage, which the bishops objected to in comments submitted to the HHS on the proposed rules.

He also noted that the administration’s final rules propose to separate the health insurance offered by the employer that was not specified in the proposed rules, which is something, he said, that “seems intended to strengthen the position of employers from the beginning of this line of opposition, and will not ultimately be paid by the employer’s premium dollars.”

He noted that the rules do not make it clear if the required portion of such funding is “genuinely separate from the objecting employer, and if so, whether it is workable to draw from that separate source.”

Regarding self-insured plans, the cardinal said the final rules treat the employer’s very act of objecting to coverage of sterilization, contraception and abortifacients as the legal authorization for a third-party administrator to secure the objectionable coverage, which the bishops objected to in comments submitted to the HHS on the proposed rules.

In a turn where the bishops will “continue to examine the extent to which the changes will force religious ministries to ‘violate their own teachings within their very own institutions.’”

Cardinal Dolan said the USCCB “will have more to say when this aspect of our analysis is completed.”
Holy Cross Associates attend conference and retreat

NOTRE DAME — Close to 80 Holy Cross Associates met for the national Holy Cross Associates Conference and Retreat, June 11-14 at Holy Cross College, Notre Dame. The theme “Part of the Family: Exploring Our Connection with the Spirit of Holy Cross,” detailed their task to fulfill Blessed Father Basil Moreau’s prophetic vision of the Congregation of Holy Cross as composed of a family of brothers, priests, sisters and lay associates.

The Holy Cross Associates, many coming from across the country, listened to several speakers, participated in prayer services and communicated with one another.

The Holy Cross Associates are lay men and women answering God’s call to provide mediating and prophetic roles within the Congregation of Holy Cross. They respond to their call while embracing the heritage and charisms of Holy Cross for the people of God and commit to grow in spirituality, community and ministry. The charisms, special virtues dedicated to living a spiritually-inspired life in the world, are conformity to Christ, trust in Divine Providence, union of hearts (community), zeal and family spirit.

Keynote speaker Marianites of Holy Cross Sister Mary Kinberger, past congregational leader of the Marianites of Holy Cross, shared her reflections on the beginning of Holy Cross in Le Mans, France, the personality of Basil Moreau, and the family spirit he wished to impart to all connected to Holy Cross. Sister Kinberger told the associates how Moreau’s life strongly influenced the evolution of the Congregation of Holy Cross and today’s mission of the order.

Holy Cross Father Edward “Monk” Malloy, former president of the University of Notre Dame and an expert on morality, talked about his personal journey, explored the moral dimensions of discipleship as it applies to the Holy Cross lay person in the post Vatican II Church and his personal inspirations of what it takes to avoid evil and do good in today’s world.

Holy Cross Brother John Paige, president of Holy Cross College and an expert on the global dimensions of Holy Cross, explored the worldwide mission of Holy Cross and how associates and friends of Holy Cross can be connected to it.

Holy Cross Sister Rose Anne Schultz, described the history and evolution of the new novices and associates of Sisters of the Holy Cross.

Holy Cross Father Robert Nogosek and Holy Cross Brother Carl Sternberg, the founders of the Holy Cross Associates in California in the 1980s, were present at the conference. Sternberg and Chairman Ignacio Martinez were the leaders of the four-day program.

St. Vincent de Paul hosts Legacy Dinner

SOUTH BEND — The St. Vincent de Paul Society of St. Joseph County hosted its annual Legacy Dinner on June 20 at the Gillespie Conference Center adjacent to the Hilton Garden Inn, with Dr. Carolyn Woo as the keynote speaker. In addition to featuring Dr. Woo, president and CEO of Catholic Relief Services, the Legacy Dinner honored the Congregation of the Sisters of Holy Cross on their 170-year history of ministry in the South Bend area.

Dr. Woo, who served as dean of the Mendoza School of Business at the University of Notre Dame from 1997 to 2012, was selected to head Catholic Relief Services in January 2012. Catholic Relief Services is the official international humanitarian agency of the Catholic community in the United States. Founded in 1943 by the Catholic Bishops of the United States to serve World War II survivors in Europe, Catholic Relief Services now serves 100 million people in nearly 100 countries on five continents.

Charlie Thompson, executive director of the St. Vincent de Paul Society of St. Joseph County, said, “This year’s legacy dinner is particularly significant because it gives us a chance to celebrate not only the contributions of Dr. Woo but also those of the Sisters of Holy Cross. While at Notre Dame, Dr. Woo and her husband, David Barkus, were strong supporters of the St. Vincent de Paul Society and her work at Catholic Relief Services speaks to her commitment to social justice throughout the world. That commitment is certainly shared by the Sisters of Holy Cross who have been serving the community as founders of Saint Joseph Regional Medical Center and Saint Mary’s College and other ministries throughout the area.” Thompson added, “Coincidentally, we are also celebrating the 180th anniversary of the society this year, and next year will be our 110th year in South Bend.”

Consistent with the celebration of these landmark anniversaries, the theme for this year’s legacy dinner was “The Journey Continues.” The legacy dinner is the society’s primary fundraising event of the year and was sponsored by Saint Joseph Regional Medical Center.

The St. Vincent de Paul Society is a Catholic lay organization that administers food, clothing, financial and other forms of direct assistance to the poor and those in need in St. Joseph County. The society also operates two thrift stores to support its mission.
Don’t be bird-brained!

Lately in the morning something has been happening as I sit on the sofa and pray or sip a nice cup of hot coffee (made by my husband, who doesn’t even drink coffee—thank you, David). The house is quiet, and that’s when I hear it: a gentle little thump, thump, thump. I look to see the same thing every day: bright red cardinals pecking in my windows. Eventually they start trying to get in.

At first when I saw the cardinals on the sill I thought they were being friendly and curious. How sweet! Birds wanting to be by us! Were they attracted to our peaceful home, our serene surroundings? Were we destined to be like St. Francis, who doesn’t even drink coffee?

What’s up? As time went on they attracted to our peaceful home, like cardinals peeking in my windows. Eventually they started flying into the window, seemingly throwing themselves at them.

What’s up? As time went on they persisted, and almost seemed desperate. Tap, tap, tap with their little beaks! Then they’d back up, revving up for flight, then thump—into the window, again and again.

At first, I noticed this behavior in our dining room, then the living room. Eventually, when I was training my girls called me from the upstairs schoolroom to report the same, just as it was occurring near me in the family room. Finally, when I took out the garbage and I saw another cardinal doing it in the garage window and then later that same day saw a pair of pretty yellow wild canaries begin to do the same thing near the kitchen, I became mildly disturbed. Thump, thump, thump, the cardinals. How sweet! How friendly and curious. How sweet!

According to various bird watching websites, this flying-into-windows behavior of birds is not uncommon at all. It is, much to my slight disappointment, not due to their attraction to a specific person or environment. The reason certain birds like cardinals fly into windows is really very simple: the birds see their reflection and perceive themselves as their own rivals during the time they are nesting and mating. Silly little bird brains! They compete with themselves!

As I thought about this, I realized we humans (with bigger brains, ability to reason, free wills and)

THE SUNDAY GOSPEL

MSGR. OWEN F. CAMPION

15th Sunday in Ordinary Time
Lk 10:25-37

The Book of Deuteronomy is one of the first five books of the Bible, collectively called the Pentateuch, from the Greek word meaning “five.” In terms of impact upon the development of the ancient Hebrew concept of religion, these books were most important. They together comprised the “Torah,” the basic pattern of how true followers of the God of Israel should live.

Central among all these books is the figure of Moses. He speaks to the people in God’s behalf. He calls the people to obey God’s commandments. Authentic obedience, however, is much more than mere lip service, in other words motions or half-hearted gestures. Rather, as Moses insists, again speaking for God, obedience to God’s law reveals a person’s complete dedication to God.

Moses also makes clear to the people that God, while almighty and invisible, and therefore neither human nor bound to the earth, and invisible, and therefore neither human nor bound to the earth, is aware of human lives and is communicating with humans.

The Epistle to the Colossians provides the second reading for this weekend. Originally, it was written to the Christians in Colossae, a relatively important city in the Roman Empire’s northern Mediterranean world. Paul’s wish for the spiritual vitality of these Christians led to the writing of this epistle.

The reading builds on the revelation given centuries earlier by Moses and by other prophets. God is invisible. He is seen, however, and perfectly so, sublimely so, in the Lord Jesus. Jesus rules over all creation and over all creatures. He is the head of the Church. The Church, this community, visible and alive with the very life of the Holy Spirit, is much, much more than a coincidental gathering of persons professing Jesus as Lord. In the Church is the spirit of Jesus. Through Jesus is the way to eternal life.

All this indicates how aware the first Christians were of the Church as the community of believers and dwelling of God.

St. Luke’s Gospel provides a very basic concept of Christian theology. Jesus says that the true disciple must love God above all and love neighbor as self. God is love. Acting with love for others in our hearts is a sign of Christian discipleship, as it is a reflection of God.

Seeking to live by resembling God is not new. Ancient belief among Hebrews, as evidenced in this weekend’s first reading, required believers to live as if they had given mind and heart to God, intent upon living in the pattern of divine love and justice.

This lesson comes in the familiar, and beautiful story of the Good Samaritan. This story has inspired Christians all through the centuries, yet it is forever fresh. Jews of the first century AD disdained Samaritans. They regarded Samaritans almost as incapable of anything good, certainly unable to be holy. To present a Samaritan as praiseworthy was revolutionary. By so doing, Jesus clearly taught that faithfulness to God, seen very tangibly, is impossible for no one. The key is complete submission to God.

Reflection

In a way, Americans at this time are much more alert to and rejecting of, prejudice. Still, prejudice lives in this country, and perhaps we individually are guilty of prejudice against ourselves.

We all may be Samaritans from time to time, set apart from God by our sin. We may feel outcasts, unworthy of God’s forgiveness. We may despise ourselves. We can return to God.

We shortchange the mercy of God. The story of the Good Samaritan is more than a call to charity and compassion. It is that, but it is a proclamation that each person can be redeemed. Everyone sins, but everyone can reform.

Loving God, and to be with God, are our destiny. We sin, of course, and maybe gravely. God’s mercy, however, sets us again on the right path.

Caring for family member is blessing and benefit

WASHINGTON, D.C., where I live, is a government town, and reminders of this fact crop up in places you might not expect. Many cities run ads in their transit systems for consumer goods and services. The ones in the Washington Metro are often focused instead on advocacy and policy.

I noticed one this month decrying cuts to Medicare and Medicaid. “Today you’re an accident,” it read. “Tomorrow you’re dad’s nurse.” Further cuts to Medicaid and Medicare will impact 87 percent of post-acute and skilled nursing care patients. We have a solution.”

The “we” refers to the American Health Care Association, a trade organization of long-term and post-acute care providers. I have mixed feelings about the ads the refer to, but I really hate the ad itself. It makes caring for your dad seem like a personal disaster. It’s not. It is actually a blessing from which many families would benefit.

In my family, we tend to live long lives and the survivors frequently end up in somebody’s home. My parents cared for my grandparents. My mother moved in with my sister. My wife’s mother lived with us for her last three years. It wasn’t always bright and cheery, or easy. She was in a wheelchair and on oxygen. If we weren’t careful, she would light up a cigarette (and risk blowing up the house).

Eventually she needed help with feeding, and then with other things. She was in and out of the hospital. Sometimes she thought it was 1927. She shared a room with our youngest child, who, at age 4, would toddle into our room at 3 a.m. and mumble, matter-of-factly without removing the pacifier, “Grandma fell out of bed.”

Despite all this, everyone was better for the time we had together. Old people have the kind of grace that takes a lifetime to acquire. They have many hours in the day, so they can be patient with little ones. They’ve committed and repented of a lifetime of sins, so they are good confidantes for teenagers. They have the humility and charm to accept care without making you feel awkward or embarrassed for them. And if they are all self-deprecating, they can be a lot of fun.

We all live through good and bad phases. My mother-in-law had a long bad phase, but she was a great old lady. She thanked my wife every day for being so good to her. Her genuine appreciation healed years of unhappiness. She died at home, surrounded by children and grandchildren singing her off to heaven. The American Health Care Association’s solution, however wonderful it might be, does not include this service.

Health providers do something really important for old people, and sometimes they’re indispensable. But I don’t like the implication that they do this so we can get on with the more important business of being accountants or lawyers or software engineers.

Our parents and grandparents are not some nuisance whose management every well-run home should outsource. They are the people whose love brought us into the world. They spent their best years raising us to adulthood. And they still have a lot to teach us—like how to grow old, how to deal with intimacy, how to prepare for death.

Those lessons may be more important than the ones they taught us when we were 6. We owe it to ourselves to have a chance to learn them.

Saint of the Week

Kateri Tekakwitha

1656-1680

July 14

At her canonization in 2012, Pope Benedict XVI prayed, “St. Kateri, protectoress of Canada and the first Native American saint, we entrust to you the renewal of the faith in the First Nations and in all of North America.” The daughter of a Mohawk chief and Algonquin woman, Kateri was orphaned in a smallpox epidemic that left her partly blind and disfigured. She was baptized by a French missionary visiting her village in New York state. But, her faith and refusal to marry caused trouble, and she fled to an Indian community near Montreal, where she was revered by French and Indians alike for her mystical gifts and kindness. The “Lily of the Mohawk” is the patron of Native Americans, refugees and the disabled.
Pastors are not interchangeable parts

A few weeks ago I came upon the odd fact that, before and during World War II, the Royal Navy built battleships with 14-inch main battery guns, whereas Britain’s principal naval rivals, Germany and Japan, were building battleships with 15- and 18-inch main batteries; moreover, the RN’s chief ally, the United States, had been building battleships mounting 16-inch guns for decades. When I quizzed a friend with long military and government experience about this curiosity, he sent a suggestive answer: “Given the cultures and the times, I’d guess that after the bureaucracy-committee-administration reached a decision, change would have been virtually impossible, and they would keep cranking out anything in its original configuration because you could never get agreement on change, absent a crisis. (It) took a lot of losses in bombing raids to spur the U.S. Army Air Corps to improve bomber protection and work on increasing fighter escort range — the bomber will always get through us. We must per sticker that sold airpower … and bomber sticker gospel is very hard to displace.”

And so, by way of Robin Hood’s barn and a cautionary tale about self-serving bureaucracies, we come to Pope Francis’s repeated criticism of a “self-referential” Church, the pope’s strictures against clerical ambition and careerism, and clergy personnel policy in too many dioceses.

Priests’ councils and clergy personnel boards were set up after Vatican II to give operational meaning to the council’s teaching that priests form a kind of presbyterate (or family, homes), yes, but we must appreciate the blessings in our own backyards. We must not let others to compare.

time of office.

Thus a priority task for the local bishop as agent of the New Evangelization is the re-evangelization of his priests, especially in long-established dioceses where the mindset of institutional-maintenance Catholicism and the habits of clerical careerism and ambition are most likely to be deeply entrenched. For priests, too, can be tempted to think of each other as interchangeable parts, some of those parts more popular than others. As long as they do clergy personnel policy will be an obstacle, not an asset, to the New Evangelization.

Based on these readings: Is 66: 10-14; Gal 6:14-18;
Luke 10: 1-12; 17-20 and Dt 30:10-14; Col 1:15-20; Lk 10:25-37

It may seem like diocesan collegiality in action. In fact, it’s hard to imagine anything farther removed from the New Evangelization.

As I wrote in “Evangelical Catholicism: Deep Reform in the 21st-Century Church,” building the Church of the New Evangelization takes time and patience in a parish setting. The time involved will vary from situation to situation, and it certainly can’t be measured in unwieldy terms of office for pastors. Moreover, once Evangelical Catholicism has taken hold in a parish — the Gospel is being preached with conviction, the liturgy is being celebrated with dignity, the parish is attracting many new Catholics, religious and priestly vocations and solid Catholic marriages are being nurtured, the works of charity and service are flourishing, and the parish finances are in order — moving a pastor out because “his term is up” is about as old Church, as institutional-maintenance Church, as you can get. Aside from the vanities of a clericalism that Pope Francis is urging the Church to shed, there is no reason to let clergy personnel policy be shaped by anything other than the demands of the New Evangelization in a challenging cultural moment.

immortal souls ...) actually do the same sometimes. We may not compete with our own reflection, but we do often compete with the reflection of others around us. Note that I said reflection of others, because sometimes it is not actually others with whom we compete. We often compete with what we perceive others to be, not who they truly are, as laws and fables just like ourselves.

We may see others as better or more talented or more holy or more ... than, than ... We may see rivals who really aren’t rivals at all, on account of our own vivid imaginations. How silly we are!

Tell me, mothers, have you ever asked yourself: “What if you saw your children in church or in the mall, not realizing that you saw a snapshot in time, not the full picture?”

Are we not, too, giving up our unique gifts and blessings in our own backyards. We must not let ourselves constantly look towards others to compare.

Fathers, have you even compared yourself harshly and unfavorably to another man, thinking that he is a much better provider than you? Have you ever even down on yourself, thinking you are not “good enough” even though you know you’re trying your best?

Stop! We can avoid being bird-brained (that is, tricked by a reflection) in several ways:

• We must remember that appearances do not always reflect reality. We must pray for the wisdom to see things as they are, not as we imagine them to be.

• We must recognize and appreciate the blessings in our own backyards. We must not let ourselves constantly look towards others to compare.

• We must protect our territories (family, homes), yes, but we must also temper our natural tendencies of competition with reason and control. We must accept the gifts and talents that God gave us, and work to overcome our own unique weaknesses and faults. And we must persist in joy and confidence. Those silly birds throwing themselves in the wind are wasting a lot of time competing with imaginary rivals. Sometimes we humans can do the same. Today I pray for the wisdom to see things as they are, and for strength and courage to accept reality, try hard, be positive and move forward in faith. My cute feathered friends might get distracted, but I’m not going to. I won’t inadvertently be bird-brained. Why? Because when you’re running into windows, you can’t fly. Think about it.

South Bend:
- Christ Child Society — $1,700 to provide hand-made winter scarves with distribution of coats, hats and mittens for children living in poverty

The blankets and mittens were made by the children at St. Anthony of Padua Parish in Angola. With 128 children participating in the weeklong program, the children began their morning at “Sing and Play Rock” where they learned a Bible verse point for the day and sang songs. Then the children broke into groups and visited five stations — Bible adventures, tournament games, king’s kitchen, Chadder’s royal theatre and imagination station. The groups rejoined each other in the parish hall for the “Fanfare Finale” where they participated in skits and more singing. On the final day, the children and their families gathered for a cookout. The week closed with a singing program for parishioners at 10 a.m. Sunday Mass.

FORT WAYNE — The Franciscan Brothers Minor and the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception co-sponsored Fortnight for Freedom rallies July 1 and 2 on the plaza of the cathedral in downtown Fort Wayne. Each evening began with music by the group “Always Forward,” the Pledge of Allegiance, the National Anthem and speakers, concluding with a rosary procession to the Allen County Courthouse. It was the second consecutive year for the rallies.

The theme of the July 1 gathering of more than an estimated 200 concerned Catholic/Christian citizens was “Catholics and the Constitution,” featuring Attorney Jeremy Reidy, of Beckman and Lawson law firm, as the principal speaker.

Following an opening prayer and introduction by Father David Mary Eno, minister general of the Franciscan Brothers Minor, Reidy began by thanking and commending Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades and the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops for “doing the right thing in this crucial time in our history by leading this Fortnight for Freedom because they know that if we don’t fight vigorously for our religious freedom we will lose it!”

“We are losing it and we’ve been losing it, slowly over time this past century,” he added.

He continued by defining the problems that led Americans to where they are today. Reidy next presented some of the founding principles on which the United States was founded and how the nation has drifted from these principles. He then discussed some of the specific attacks currently facing this country. And, finally, he gave the supportive crowd his thoughts on what can be done to change the tide of aggression and thereby protect religious liberty and bless the nation.

Reidy quoted Pope Benedict XVI who told the U.S. bishops during their “ad limina” visits in 2012 that what the nation needs now is an informed and courageous laity to regain the culture.

In presenting the problems being faced, Reidy said, “There’s been a radical shift in our definition of freedom. Freedom has gone from the liberty to rule oneself according to reason to freedom as the absence of external restraints on actions. We live in a country whose populace sees liberty as letting everybody do what he or she wants. It’s what Pope Benedict XVI referred to as the dictatorship of relativism.”

“While the problem is that without objective truth there cannot be true freedom,” Reidy emphasized.

“The natural law has been slowly and surely pushed out of our legal system by a growing propaganda effort to infer that those who insist that the right to life and the definition of marriage as being between one man and one woman are taking quote ‘a religious position,’ which has no place in policy for political discourse. … Because such natural law positions are quote ‘religious,’ they have no place in a public square and must be confined to church buildings, the culture is saying.

“Our nation began as a haven for people who were different in their religious beliefs,” he continued. “Our founders saw religious faith as vital to a life of free people. … They clearly understood that religion is a vital part of the social and moral code.

“The Supreme Court has had its share of problems with restricting religious liberty but the majority of recent religious liberty suppression has come from the executive branch of government. This is intolerable,” he emphasized.

Reidy concluded his remarks by listing seven things to influence the culture and, hopefully, change the suppression of religious freedom: pray, vote, be Christ in the world, use the natural law to persuade, educate youth, stay involved, and support and pray for bishops and priests.

The second night of the Fortnight for Freedom rally in downtown Fort Wayne featured three area physicians who discussed the “Medical Moral Dilemma for Catholic Doctors” arising from the recently enacted Affordable Health Care Act, more popularly known as Obamacare.

Dr. Thomas McGovern, local dermatologist, Dr. Kate Heimann, a family practitioner from Decatur, and Dr. Eustace Fernandes, a critical care specialist, presented their views on the challenges that Catholic physicians face in practicing medicine under the new law. Dr. McGovern is president, Dr. Heimann is vice-president and Dr. Fernandes is a board member of the Dr. Jerome Lejeune Guild of Northeast Indiana, an organization of Catholic physicians.

“This Catholic medical association who deals with end-of-life issues, the culture of death. He said that a life-affirming conscience believes that maintaining life should merely be a necessary end-of-life interventions, that nutrition and hydration are necessary, that suffering has value, and that a patient’s faith is paramount at the end of life.

On the other hand, the culture of death teaches that human dignity is found only in what one can accomplish, that the body is just a machine to be abandoned when it ceases to function properly, that life-preserving measures are unnecessary, that there is no value in suffering, and that maintaining life should merely be a financial decision.

As Catholics “we must stand firm” in our beliefs, he said.

Dr. McGovern closed the evening by challenging his listeners to continue the fight for religious freedom through prayer and sacrifice, to tell everyone how the government is attempting to destroy the culture of life, to educate themselves and know the issues, to become politically active and to resist the culture of death.

He ended with a plea for prayer for physicians, health care providers and politicians as they deal with the Affordable Health Care Act and its consequences.
