Pro-life advocates rally, march for life

The Knights of Columbus lead the 40th Annual March for Life through the streets of Fort Wayne from the University of Saint Francis Performing Arts Center to the E. Ross Adair Federal Building Saturday, Jan. 18.

BY TIM JOHNSON

FORT WAYNE — Carrying pro-life banners and filled with hope and encouragement, thousands of area citizens gathered at the University of Saint Francis Performing Arts Center for a noon rally followed by the 40th annual March for Life through downtown Fort Wayne on Jan. 18.

The 40th annual March for Life marked the 41st anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court decision that legalized abortion in 1973. More than an estimated 55 million unborn children have been victims of abortion since the Supreme Court decision, including more than 30,000 children in Allen County.

Allen County Right to Life Executive Director Cathie Humberger, also the event organizer, announced, “By the grace of God and with the support of every one in this room, I am pleased to tell you that since Jan. 1, there have been no abortions done at the abortion clinic (in Fort Wayne).”

After a rousing applause, Humberger said due to circumstances that occurred at the end of last year, “the abortion business is at least ‘temporarily’ shut down. And I implore you to please continue to pray that this is a permanent closure.”

The rally’s keynote speaker, Angela Minter, is the executive director of Sisters For Life, a Kentucky-based, nonprofit dedicated to defending the sanctity of life at every stage from conception to mature adulthood.

Minter, who was also the keynote speaker at the Elkhart County Right to Life rally and march just a week earlier on Jan. 11, is a born again Christian.

Indiana bishops endorse proposed constitutional amendment on marriage

BY SEAN GALLAGHER

INDIANAPOLIS (CNS) — The six Catholic bishops in Indiana have endorsed a proposed state constitutional amendment that would define marriage as exclusively between one man and one woman.

The proposed amendment also states that other legal unions “identical or substantially similar to that of marriage” will not be recognized by the state.

Glenn Tebbe, executive director of the Indiana Catholic Conference, the official public policy voice of the Catholic Church in Indiana regarding state and national matters, spoke on behalf of the bishops Jan. 13 when the Indiana House Judiciary Committee met to hear testimony on House Joint Resolution 3, or HJR 3.

“We support HJR 3 as a means for defending the nature of marriage as the union of one man and one woman,” Tebbe said.

He was joined by several other witnesses representing various groups — some supporting the measure, some opposing it.

The committee meeting ended without a vote being taken on the proposal. No date has been set for a vote.

In his testimony, Tebbe affirmed the Catholic Church’s teaching on the dignity of every human person, “including persons with same-sex attraction.”

At the same time, he noted that the Church upholds the “dignity and sanctity of marriage,” which, “by its very nature ... is a permanent partnership between one man and one woman.”

Tebbe also explained that marriage so understood is the “foundation of the family” and provides a solid context for the raising of children. He also said that “it is not within the power of either the church or the state to redefine marriage since God is its author.”

Much of his testimony was either based on or taken directly from a pastoral statement about the dignity of all human persons and the dignity of marriage issued in December by Indiana’s Catholic bishops.

The statement, issued Dec. 4, was signed by: Archbishop Joseph W. Tobin and Auxiliary Bishop Christopher J. Coyne of Indianapolis, who is vicar general; Bishop Timothy L. Doherty of Lafayette; Bishop Dale J. Melchert of Gary; Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades of Fort Wayne-South Bend; and Bishop Charles C. Thompson of Evansville.

Bishop Rhoades makes pastoral visit, announces patron saint, confirms student

FORT WAYNE — Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades celebrated Mass and visited classrooms during his recent pastoral visit to Bishop Dwenger High School. He also made a surprise announcement of the newly named patron saint of the school, the Blessed Virgin Mary, Queen of All Saints, whose feast day is Aug. 22. Since the school mascot is a saint, the bishop said he thought the designation was especially appropriate and the students reacted with pleasure and spontaneous applause. And Bishop Rhoades also conferred the sacrament of Confirmation on senior Alex Schenkel during the Mass, an unprecedented event on school grounds for the more than 3,000 students in attendance.

In greeting the student body, Bishop Rhoades said, “It’s great to be with you today ... one of my favorite things as a bishop is my visits to high schools.”

In opening his remarks during the homily, he said, “I’d like to reflect with you today on three people, Hannah, Samuel and Alexander.”

Hannah, one of the great women of the Bible, was unable to bear children. Because she was reproached, criticized and ridiculed for her frailty, she was deeply hurt and fell into depression. This was her weakness, that she drew her self-esteem from the opinions of others, the bishop said. We too can be strongly influenced by others and by our culture. “This weakness reveals a lack of knowledge, in our heart as well as our mind, that our true worth comes from our identity as beloved children of God,” said Bishop Rhoades.

However, we can learn from Hannah’s strength as well, he pointed out. She had a deep faith in God and never doubted His power. She beseeched Him until God finally answered her prayer and she conceived and gave birth to a son, Samuel. Hannah teaches us to persevere in prayer. Her son Samuel teaches us lessons as well, said Bishop Rhoades. He was a prophet and a judge, a great figure of the Old Testament. He anointed the first king of Israel, Saul, and Saul’s successor, King David. Samuel was honest and fair and dispensed God’s law impartially. As a prophet, he exhorted the people to turn away from idolatry and to serve God alone. Samuel was a man of great integrity who loved God and obeyed Him without question. His first loyalty was to God, regardless of what the king or the people thought of him.

“This is the faith and loyalty that is so needed in our culture today ... Sometimes being a good Catholic is unpopular,” he said. “We need the courage to live our faith even when it brings criticism or rejection. “We need courageous young people like you, Bishop Dwenger Saints.”

The third person Bishop Rhoades spoke of was Alexander, a student at Bishop Dwenger High School, not about his background or life, but about the event taking place that day, his reception of the sacrament of Confirmation.

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Supreme Court justices Jan. 15 pressed attorneys about when it is constitutional to prohibit certain kinds of speech in a case over buffer zones around abortion clinics.

In oral arguments in a case over a 35-foot buffer zone around Massachusetts Planned Parenthood clinics, the attorney for people who want to approach clinic patients for “sidewalk counseling” to discourage them from having abortions argued that the state law “runs into a big First Amendment problem of even eliminating peaceful, consensual conversation that doesn’t disrupt anything.”

Mark Rienzi, attorney for the people who sued the state, told the court that the idea of the government picking one topic, in this case abortion, “and saying, well, around this, suddenly the character of the public forum changes from a place where people can have peaceful, consensual conversations to a place where we will imprison them for doing that, I think that’s a dramatic restriction of First Amendment rights.”

Several justices questioned attorneys on both sides about how a law could be structured narrowly enough to prevent aggressive conduct at clinics that was targeted by the Massachusetts statute, without stepping too far into First Amendment rights.

Attorneys conceded that no other states have laws creating such large restricted zones at abortion clinics.

The case, McCullen v. Coakley, was brought by several people who volunteer as “sidewalk counselors” outside Planned Parenthood clinics in Boston, Springfield and Worcester, Mass.

Under a 2007 state law, there are yellow semicircular lines painted 35 feet from the entrances to the clinics, delineating how far away the sidewalk counselors and abortion protesters must stay.

The law prohibits conversations about abortion within the zone by anyone except employees of the abortion clinics.

In arguing that the 35-foot zone and its restrictions are necessary, Jennifer Grace Miller, Massachusetts assistant attorney general, disagreed with Justice Antonin Scalia’s assertion that “this is not a protest case. These people don’t want to protest abortion. They want to talk to the women who are about to get abortions and try to talk them out of it.”

Scalia said “if it was a protest, keeping them back 35 feet might not be so bad. They can scream and yell and hold signs from 35 feet. But what they can’t do is try to talk the woman out of the abortion. It’s a counseling case, not a protest case.”

Miller said “it’s a congestion case,” adding that people can have the conversations with clinic patients, “it’s just that those conversations are moved back a few feet.” She said the 35-foot zone was necessary to prevent people from impeding the entrances to clinics.

A federal law that prohibits blocking clinic entrances is not applicable, she said, because it only applies to activities such as sit-down protests and people chaining themselves to doorways, not to the act of trying to converse with patients.

The last time the court considered the constitutionality of buffer zones around abortion clinics in 2000, it upheld Colorado’s law prohibiting abortion protests or sidewalk counseling within eight feet of people approaching any medical facility. The court ruled 6-3 that the law was not a regulation of speech but a regulation of the places where some speech may occur.

Eleanor McCullen, a parishioner of St. Ignatius Parish at Boston College, is the lead plaintiff among those who sued, saying the law limits their ability to exercise their rights under the First and 4th Amendments to free speech and equal protection under the law.

Last summer after the court agreed to take the case, several people who do sidewalk counseling told The Catholic Free Press, newspaper of the Worcester Diocese that they hoped for a ruling in their favor so they could be more low-key in their approaches to people.

Nancy Clark, a parishioner of Our Lady of the Angels Parish in Worcester, told the newspaper that with a change in the law, “I wouldn’t have to yell.” When yelling to get clients’ attention from a distance “you look like a fanatic” and “they may not hear what we are saying,” she said.

Sidewalk counselor Mark Bashour of Our Lady of Perpetual Help, the Melkite Catholic parish in Worcester, said even those not against abortion should see that the law is unconstitutional and dangerous.

“What happens when the government doesn’t like what you’re doing with your freedom of speech?” he said. “What are they going to do next if this is found unconstitutional?”

“This is a First Amendment right,” McCullen told the Free Press. “My feeling is, I should be able to speak to whom ever I want, wherever I want. I shouldn’t be curtailed by this line, because I lose people. I’m not harassing... I’m just a grandmother trying to offer help.”

Other plaintiffs in the suit include Father Eric Cadin, a priest who does sidewalk counseling or praying outside the Boston Planned Parenthood location.

A ruling in the case is expected before the court adjourns for the summer in late June.
Vatican representatives testify before U.N. committee looking at abuse

BY CINDY WOODEN AND CAROL GLATZ

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Testifying before the U.N. Committee on the Rights of the Child, a Vatican representative acknowledged the horror of clerical sexual abuse and insisted the Vatican was serious about protecting children.

Archbishop Silvano Tomasi, the Vatican observer to U.N. agencies in Geneva, said the Church recognizes abuse of children as both a crime and sin, and the Vatican has been promoting policies that, “when properly applied, will help eliminate the occurrence of child sexual abuse by clergy and other Church personnel.”

The archbishop spoke in Geneva Jan. 16 during the committee’s annual session to review reports from states that signed the U.N. Convention on the Rights of the Child. The Holy See signed the treaty in 1990.

“There is no excuse for any form of violence or exploitation of children,” the archbishop said. “Such crimes can never be justified, whether committed in the home, in schools, in community and sports programs, in religious organizations and structures.”

Pope Francis, in a homily at his early morning Mass the same day, spoke generally about the shame of the “many scandals” perpetrated by members of the Church. Those who abuse and exploit others, he said, may wear a holy medal or a cross, but they have no “living relationship with God or with His word.”

Instead of giving others “the bread of life,” he said, they feed them poison.

Archbishop Tomasi told the committee that, in December, Pope Francis approved the establishment of an international commission to promote child protection and prevent abuse. He said Vatican City State recently updated its laws to define and set out penalties for specific crimes against minors, including the sale of children, child prostitution, the military recruitment of children, sexual violence against children and producing or possessing child pornography.

In late November, the Vatican responded in writing to questions from the committee about its last report on compliance with the treaty; much of the Vatican response involved explaining the difference between the Vatican’s direct legal jurisdiction over Vatican City State and its moral and canonical influence over Catholics around the world.

“Priests are not functionaries of the Vatican,” Archbishop Tomasi told the committee. “They are citizens of their own state and fall under the jurisdiction of that state.”

Jesus Father Federico Lombardi, Vatican spokesman, said in a statement Jan. 16 that questions posed by the committee and others “seem to presuppose that bishops and religious superiors act as representatives or delegates of the pope, something which is without foundation.”

Since responding in November, Archbishop Tomasi told the committee, “a citizen of Vatican City State has been placed under investigation for alleged sexual crimes committed against children outside the territory of Vatican City State.”

Asked by the committee about the case, Archbishop Tomasi declined to give details because the investigation is still underway, but he said it would be handled “with the severity it deserves.”

The archbishop was referring to Archbishop Joseph Wesolowski, who was removed as nuncio to the Dominican Republic in August after he was accused of paying for sex with boys in the Caribbean country.

Father Lombardi confirmed Jan. 11 that the former nuncio was being investigated canonically by the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith and also was the subject of a criminal investigation by Vatican City State legal authorities.

The Geneva committee asked Archbishop Tomasi whether Archbishop Wesolowski would be extradited, but Archbishop Tomasi said that, as a diplomat, he would be tried at the Vatican, under Vatican civil laws.

Archbishop Tomasi acknowledged that “abusers are found among members of the world’s most respected professions, most regrettably, including members of the clergy and other Church personnel.”

Abuse by clergy, he said, is “particularly serious since these persons are in positions of great trust, and they are called to levels of service that are to promote and protect all elements of the human person, including physical, emotional and spiritual health. This relationship of trust is critical and demands a higher sense of responsibility and respect for the persons served.”

In his remarks before the U.N. committee meeting, organizations representing victims of clerical sex abuse and others continued to make public criticisms of the Vatican and to challenge its direct responsibility for handling or mishandling cases of abuse around the globe.

Archbishop Tomasi told Vatican Radio, “The criticisms are easy to make and sometimes have a basis in reality; any crime is an evil, but when children are involved it becomes even more serious.”

At the same time, he said, “the accusation that the Holy See has blocked the carrying out of justice seems unfounded.”

The Committee on the Rights of the Child broadcast the session live on the Internet.

Auxiliary Bishop Charles Scicluna of Malta, the former sex abuse investigator in the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, also appeared before the U.N. committee and answered questions, specifically about canon law and Vatican policy in dealing with allegations of clerical sexual abuse.
Testimony heard on HJR3 to ban same-sex ‘marriage,’ holds vote

INDIANAPOLIS — Last week, the Indiana House Judiciary Committee heard testimony on HJR 3, a resolution to change Indiana’s constitution to ban all same-sex unions, but failed to take a vote on the measure. A committee vote is still pending.

The Indiana Catholic Conference supports HJR 3 as a means of defending the nature of marriage as the union of one man and one woman.

Current Indiana law defines marriage as a union between one man and one woman, but concerns that without a constitutional amendment to ban same-sex unions a challenge to Indiana’s current law could force Indiana to recognize them.

Turner also refuted claims that passing a same-sex marriage ban “would hurt Indiana.” He said the resolution sounds out the economic growth in the states that have a same-sex marriage ban.

Glenn Tebbe, executive director for the Indiana Catholic Conference, testified in support of the measure saying, “The Indiana Catholic Conference supports the truth about marriage according to God’s plans and laws even as it supports the dignity of all persons. We call on all citizens to defend and protect these truths. We do support HJR 3 as a means of defending the nature of marriage as the union between one man and one woman.”

Ryan Anderson, a Heritage Foundation fellow and doctoral candidate in public policy at the University of Notre Dame, said marriage developed over time and cultures as the institution to maximize the likelihood that man and woman unite, and take responsibility to raise their children. Social science evidence says that gender different human parenting is necessary culturally and biologically for the optimum development of the child.

“The state’s interest in marriage is not that it cares about my love life or yours for the sake of romance,” said Anderson. “The state’s interest in marriage is to ensure that those kids have fathers who are involved in their life because the consequences for fatherless children are really serious.

“Redefining marriage fundamentally reorients the institution of marriage away from the needs of children and toward the desires of adults,” said Anderson. “It no longer makes marriage about creating a family life that’s ideal for kids, but it’s more about adults’ romance.”

He asked, “How do we insist that fathers are essential, when the law redefines marriage to make fathers optional?” The poor and society are better served by the state defining marriage to ensure that a woman and man take responsibility for their children.

Anderson also raised concerns about religious liberty noting that in states that recognize same-sex marriage institutions, churches and private commercial businesses are coerced by law to recognize same-sex unions even if doing so violates their conscience.Anderson discussed further concerns that redefining marriage also raises new legal challenges and opens up a legal “slippery slope” to challenge three other historic tenants of marriage: monogamy, sexually exclusive and permanent unions. This action would cause further family fragmentation.

Jackie Simmons, vice president of New Life Community Church, Indianapolis, who testified in opposition to the measure, said she believed the amendment would prohibit Indiana from extending same-sex couple benefits.

Representatives from Eli Lilly and Co., Cummins Engines Inc., and the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce among other business leaders testified in opposition to the legislation stating that the legislation would inhibit their ability to recruit the best and the brightest talent to Indiana. Individuals also testified in opposition to the measure claiming that same-sex couples would be denied the same marriage rights as heterosexual couples so the proposal infringed on their civil rights.

Jim Boop, a constitutional law attorney of 35 years, argued that the much debated second sentence in HJR 3 does not prohibit a “few peculiar benefits being extended” to same-sex couples who are unmarried, such as visitation rights, protection in domestic violence situations, domestic partner benefits or naming beneficiaries.

“These rights are being given now to single people. These claims by the opponents are just red herrings that the opponents like to use to keep Indiana’s statute in its very vulnerable position,” said Boop.

Maureen Gutgsell, a celibate Catholic lesbian from Jasper, Ind., testified in support of traditional marriage.

“People probably wonder how a lesbian could be opposed to gay marriage,” said Gutgsell. “It’s really quite simple, I’m Catholic. We are all called to live holy and chaste lives. It is not an injustice to anyone to define marriage between one man and one woman.”

Rev. Andrew Hunt, III, pastor of New Life Community Church, Indianapolis, who testified in support of HJR 3, said, “I’m an African American who lived through the civil rights movement and there is no comparison between the civil rights movement and same-sex marriage.”

If HJR 3 passes the Indiana General Assembly this session, Hoosiers will have an opportunity to approve it by referendum vote during the General Election Nov. 4.

Constitutional bans on same-sex unions in the United States, by state

Thirty-one U.S. state constitutional amendments banning legal recognition of same-sex unions have been adopted. Of these, nine make same-sex marriage unconstitutional; 17 make both same-sex marriage and civil unions unconstitutional; two make same-sex marriage, civil unions and other contracts unconstitutional; two have been found unconstitutional.

As of January 2014, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Iowa, Vermont, New York, New Hampshire, Maine, Maryland, Washington, California, Rhode Island, Minnesota, New Jersey, Hawaii, New Mexico, and Illinois allow same-sex marriage. The District of Columbia also allows same-sex marriage.

It quoted the Catechism of the Catholic Church and affirms the dignity of all people, “including persons with same-sex attraction, who must be accepted with respect, compassion, and sensitivity.”

At the same time, the bishops said, marriage is a “natural institution established by God” that exists only between one man and one woman.

After the committee hearing, Tebbe told The Criterion, Indianapolis’ archdiocesan newspaper, the bishops’ statement did not directly address the proposed amendment because at that point the state legislators had not yet decided they would take it up for consideration.

“The pastoral statement was more to help people focus on what the big issues are, how people can form their consciences about the teachings of the Church,” Tebbe said.

In early January, the legislators announced they would consider HJR 3.

“Once we had this particular question posed in terms of if we support this amendment or not, we did answer that,” Tebbe said, adding that his testimony affirmed “what our position is and that, given the circumstance right now, (HJR 3) is a means of defending the union in marriage of a man and a woman.”

The resolution was passed by both the Indiana Senate and Indiana House of Representatives in 2011. For it to become a ballot measure for the 2014 general election, it will need to be passed without change by a simple majority in both bodies during the upcoming session.

In Indiana, constitutional amendments are voted on in a ballot measure only after they are approved by two separately elected legislatures.

Proclaiming Gospel at ‘heart’ of Catholic education, says archbishop

WASHINGTON (CNS) — National Catholic Schools Week will be observed in U.S. dioceses Jan. 26- Feb. 1 with the theme: “Catholic Schools: Communities of Faith, Knowledge and Service.”

“Schools have educated millions of young people over the years by providing them a superior academic background, always pointing the way to eternal life,” said Archbishop George J. Lucas of Omaha, Neb., chairman of the education committee of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

“The success of Catholic schools in handing on the faith, generation after generation, is a bright light in the history of the Church in the United States,” he added. About 2.1 million students are currently educated in more than 6,600 Catholic schools across the country. Of these students, an estimated 99 percent graduate from high school and 85 percent attend college. “The heart of the apostolate of Catholic education is the mission of teaching the love of Jesus Christ. Catholic schools provide a rich environment of faith and learning where students experience how much God loves them in Christ,” Archbishop Lucas said.

‘Extension Day’ video contest exhorts filmmakers to ‘make some noise’

Pope encourages ecumenism in response to secularism

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Francis said the evangelization of secular society requires focusing on the essentials of Christianity in collaboration with other Christian churches.

The pope made his remarks Jan. 17 at a meeting with representatives of the Lutheran Church in Finland, who were making their annual ecumenical pilgrimage to Rome on the feast of Finland’s patron, St. Henry. The meeting occurred one day before the start of the annual Week of Prayer for Christian Unity. Pope Francis told the group that ecumenical relations lately have been undergoing “significant changes, owing above all to the fact that we find ourselves professing our faith in the context of societies and cultures every day more lacking in reference to God and all that entails the transcendent dimension of life. For this very reason, our witness must concentrate on the center of our faith, on the announcement of the love of God made manifest in Christ His Son,” the pope said. “Here we find space to grow in communion and in unity, promoting spiritual ecumenism.”

Poor, elderly at most risk in chemical spill aftermath, say officials

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (CNS) — For 72-year-old Ben Dettinger and his wife, Wanda, 70, of Mink Shoals, just north of Charleston, the chemical spill has left the community shrouded in fear.

The Dettingers’ home is not far from the wheeling-Charleston Diocese are most concerned about the disaster — the elderly and the poor. “For you and me, it’s an inconvenience not to have water,” said Elizabeth Hardy, the Catholic agency’s western regional director in Charleston. “We can go to the store and buy it. For those who are low-income (or elderly), it’s difficult. ... We assisted about 1,400 families Saturday and Sunday (Jan. 11 and 12) with donations of water. All of our services right now are geared to those who have limited income or who are poor.”

Kerry, Vatican counterpart meet on Syria, Mideast, U.S. health mandate

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Cardinal-designate Pietro Parolin, Vatican secretary of state, hosted a lengthy meeting with his U.S. counterpart, John Kerry, to discuss ongoing tensions in the Middle East, as well as the U.S. bishops’ concerns about the Obama administration’s health care mandate. “The meeting was very broad; it lasted about one hour and 40 minutes,” said Jesuit Father Federico Lombardi, Vatican spokesman.

them for the discussions. Archbishop Dominiqe Mamberti, the Vatican’s foreign minister, participated, as did Vatican’s Nuncio, Kerry’s assistant secretary of state for European and Eurasian affairs; Shaun Casey, special adviser to Kerry for faith-based and community initiatives, and Ken Hackett, U.S. ambassador to the Holy See. “Various themes were discussed and naturally those related to Syria were the first of the discussion. the situation in Syria and preparations for the (upcoming peace) conference in Geneva,” Father Lombardi said, referring to the U.N.-sponsored peace talks scheduled for Jan. 22.

Vocations are calls to build up God’s kingdom, pope says in message

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — A vocation to the priesthood, consecrated life or marriage is a call to center one’s life on Christ and build up His kingdom, Pope Francis said. "The more we unite ourselves to Jesus through prayer, sacred Scripture, the Eucharist, the sacraments celebrated and lived in the Church and in fraternity, the more there will grow in us the joy of cooperating with God in the service of the kingdom of mercy and truth, of justice and peace,” the pope said in his message for the 2014 World Day of Prayer for Vocations.

All Christians are called to adore the Lord and allow the seed of His word to grow in their lives and be transformed in the service of others. For this reason the pope said in the message for the day, which will be celebrated May 11 at the Vatican and in many dioceses around the world. In his message, released at the Vatican Jan. 16, Pope Francis said that while God calls each person individually by name, “no vocation is born of itself or lives for itself. A vocation is a fruit that ripens in a well-cultivated field of mutual love that becomes mutual service to all as a means of building the place in the context of an authentic Christian community.

Pope replaces cardinals serving on Vatican bank oversight commission

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Francis replaced four cardinals serving on a five-person commission overseeing the Vatican bank. The new members include Canadian Cardinal Thomas Collins of Toronto and Cardinal-designate Pietro Parolin, Vatican secretary of state. French Cardinal Jean-Louis Tauran, president of the Pontifical Council for Interreligious Dialogue, is the only serving member the pope asked to stay on. The Vatican made the announcement Jan. 15. The responsibilities of the five-member Commission of Cardinals Oversight for the Institute for the Works of Religion, the formal title of the bank, include appointing the bank’s president — an appointment, which then must be approved by the pope. In addition to Cardinal Collins and Cardinal-designate Parolin, the new members are Austrian Cardinal Christoph Schönborn of Vienna and Spanish Cardinal Santos Abrib Castello, the archbishop of Rome’s Basilica of St. Mary Major.

Notre Dame alumnus Archbishop Felix named cardinal

NOTRE DAME — Archbishop Kelvin Edward Felix, emeritus archbishop of Castries, Saint Lucia, who will be made a cardinal by Pope Francis next month, is a graduate of the University of Notre Dame.

Archbishop Felix, who enrolled at Notre Dame in 1965, studied sociology and earned a master’s degree from the university in 1968. A native of Roseau, Dominica, Archbishop Felix oversaw the West Indian dioceses of Castries in St. Lucia, St. George in Grenada, Roseau in Dominica, and St. John Basseterre in Antigua and St. Kitts from 1981 until his retirement in 2008. He now lives in Dominica where he assists as a priest in several Catholic parishes.

At 81, Archbishop Felix is one of three new cardinals older than the age of 80 and, therefore, ineligible to vote in a papal conclave. All 19 of those whose names Pope Francis announced Sunday, Jan. 12, will be made cardinals during a ceremony on Feb. 22 at the St. Peter’s Basilica in Rome.

FORT WAYNE — Twenty-seven years ago Mary Haverstick took the administrative reins of Saint Anne Home and Retirement Community of the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend and has built a heartfelt legacy that she hopes will endure for years to come. She will be retiring Feb. 7.

“It’s been a great journey. Lots of things have changed through the 27 years I’ve been here. But I still love it,” says Haverstick.

Directing a large staff at a nursing facility such as Saint Anne’s requires a person with sound leadership skills but also a heart for people. Haverstick feels she has both. “It’s not just a job with a paycheck. … It’s a mission. … You have to have a heart for it,” she says.

“I bring compassion, understanding and a willingness to work with anyone who needs anything,” she says, noting that with the exception of skilled nursing care she has assisted staff in all areas of the facility. “I would never ask anyone to do what I wouldn’t do myself,” she says.

Her interest in an administrative vocation in a nursing facility stems, she says, from her own experience with at home caregiving. Her youngest daughter Jennifer is disabled requiring around the clock care. And, she says, her experience caring for her 105-year-old grandmother has known Haverstick since 2007 and says she is strong, decisive and fair. “Mary uses a balanced approach in analyzing the information available to her, enabling her to make informed decisions,” he says, adding that she is also “a passionate individual who puts others’ needs above her own. She cares deeply for our residents and employees. She is genuine and authentic.”

Kohnen continues, “Mary has a passion for helping people succeed and tends to bring out the best in others. Her dedication and commitment to our current and future residents has shown through her willingness to listen and adapt as the needs of the home changed. … She has shown tenacity and determination over the years as she championed the growing demands for various levels of care needs within our community.

Board member and deacon of the diocese, Deacon Jim Fitzpatrick, who has known Haverstick for 15 years agrees, saying, “Mary has always brought a big heart for the people in her care, not just the residents of the home but her vendors and employees as well.”

Retirement is a hard won prize for Haverstick who admits it is a bittersweet affair. “I’m going to miss this place,” she says. As her husband’s health continues to decline she plans to spend more time with him as well as with her beloved grandchildren and the family’s newest addition, their great grandson. She also hopes to engage in her favorite hobbies that include rubber stamping, gardening and cooking.

Her hope for Saint Anne’s as she leaves in February? “I hope Saint Anne’s continues to be Christian-based, and the person who takes over for me makes it the best it can be. … I’ll leave it in God’s hands and He’ll provide and take care of those that He’s entrusted us with.”

A retirement celebration will be held in Haverstick’s honor at Saint Anne Home on Jan. 31, 2014.
When Blessed John Paul II visited New York in 1979, he instructed Catholic educators who were present with the following words: “Jesus shares with you His teaching for all the world. And I teach the Word of God. That He will give you an ever-greater love for your students and an even stronger commitment to your vocation as Catholic educators. If you continue to be faithful to this ministry...you will be doing much to shape a peaceful, just and hope-filled world for the future. Yours is a great gift to the Church, a great gift to the nation.”

The mission of our Catholic schools is perhaps more important today than ever. Over the last academic year, 3,900 students have been admitted to diocesan schools with state school choice support. These 3,900 new students have been afforded the opportunity to learn and embrace their faith through the support of a community of dedicated, faith-filled teachers, administrators and pastors.

An 11 year old from one diocesan school described his enthusiasm for his new Catholic school: “Our teacher helps us learn math and reading, but we get to pray and talk about Jesus, too. I like it when we go to Mass together as a school, and it’s special when you get to do the readings. Most of all, I’m glad I’m learning to be an altar server.”

Currently, across our diocese, there are approximately 900 children with some identified special need being served within our schools. We must continue to address the needs of special education students, while securing additional specialists with various areas of expertise who can address all aspects of students’ learning and respect the challenges they face.

Over the last three years, teachers and administrators in our diocese have been diligently working together to strengthen diocesan curriculum, subject by subject, in order to improve upon not only what is taught, but how it is taught. As these very knowledgeable educators work together, they have a constant awareness of their curriculum must integrate fully with our faith.

As we celebrate Catholic Schools Week 2014, we offer gratitude to the many parents, past and present, who have entrusted the treasure of their children to the care of Catholic schools. We also offer sincere gratitude to the 1,400 Catholic schoolteachers, administrators, staff members and pastors who lead the 41 schools of our diocese. They truly are, in the words of Blessed John Paul II, “great gifts to the Church.” These men and women understand their important vocation and are answering the call to shape a “peaceful, just and hope-filled world for the future.” For this, 14,000 diocesan students and their parents are the fortunate and grateful beneficiaries.

The continuing success of the ministry of Catholic schools depends upon the commitment and support of teachers, parents and the whole Catholic community. Through their generous contributions of time, talent, treasure and prayer, the Catholic schools of the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend will long remain strong in faith, knowledge and service.

Marsha Jordan is the interim superintendent of Catholic Schools in the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend.
St. Charles School alum drawn back home to teach

BY KAY LOZAD

FORT WAYNE — St. Charles School in Fort Wayne is one of the largest Catholic Schools in the Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend. Founded in fall of 1959 with 247 students in grades 1-6, the school now boasts a student body of over 775 children in grades kindergarten through 8.

Of the staff of over 40 regular and specialist teachers 18 are graduates of this exemplary Christ-centered elementary school. They each have roots of safety, knowledge, and skills needed to be successful in life.

Principal Rob Sordelet, in his 13th year as principal at St. Charles, is the first male administrator to take the helm in the school’s history. With parents who were founding members of the parish, he and his six siblings all graduated from St. Charles School and he feels at home there in every way.

“We have been very blessed at St. Charles. We are a stable community. … The continuity helps us know where we want to go as a school community because we know where we have been,” he says.

As a student at St. Charles, Sordelet recalls the supportive, caring lay teachers, sisters and priests with fondness. He says of his childhood, “The Catholic system was a rich experience.” And he is proud classroom teachers and administrators to carry on the educational and spiritual legacy for which St. Charles has come to be known.

Sordelet notes that roughly a third of the teaching staff at St. Charles are alum. “Our graduates come back and want to work for us,” he reports. One such alum, Becky Silkworth, sixth-grade math and science teacher, is in her fifth year of teaching at St. Charles. She is thrilled to be part of a staff where so many of the teachers were the inspiration for her career choice.

She says, “The family presence at St. Charles has always been and continues to be very strong.”

Silkworth finds little has changed about performance levels and the faith-based community since her days as a student at St. Charles. St. Charles students, staff and families still have the Cardinal pride. The school still builds and maintains a strong faith within its community,” Silkworth says.

“We strive to serve others, share faith and seek knowledge daily,” she says, adding that the school family is much more diverse today.

Coworker Barb Richter, who is in her seventh year of teaching seventh- and eighth-grade grammar classes, and was also inspired by her teachers at St. Charles, says, “Even though St. Charles had a large faculty and a large student body, I always felt as though we were just a big family and St. Charles was our home.”

Having taught elsewhere before coming to St. Charles, Richter is delighted to be able to talk about her faith openly and work at the same school her two children attended.

Richter says, “I would be able to give back to the same school where I was so richly formed in the Catholic faith. Above all, I would truly be able to come back home.”

That home, she says, is still top notch. “The students are the best part of my job as they really do challenge me to grow and to be a better teacher and a better person each and every day,” she says.

“Our superb priests, administration, staff and parents support me in and out of the classroom. I cannot say enough about my coworkers,” she adds.

And though Richter sees technology differences and more opportunities for student involvement today, she notes gratefully that, “The focus of living the Catholic faith still filters through all aspects of the school day.”

Seventh-grade literature and religion teacher Susie Frazier remembers always wanting to be a teacher. With so many fond memories of attending St. Charles, she says, “As a student at St. Charles I felt safe and loved by my teachers while being able to grow in my Catholic faith. … It was only natural for me to seek my teaching profession back at St. Charles.”

Frazier, in her 10th year of teaching at the school, is passing that feeling of safety and love to her students now and embraces the atmosphere that nurtures faith, academics and community.

“I love everything about being a teacher at St. Charles,” she says. “Most specifically, I love the staff, my students and the family atmosphere that gives me the opportunity to continuously grow in my Catholic faith.”

Frazier adds, “I also feel that the staff today genuinely cares for each
St. John the Baptist, New Haven Alum reaps benefits as teacher

By Kay Cozad

NEW HAVEN — Sandra Weikel is a fourth-grade teacher at St. John the Baptist School in New Haven and brings a unique perspective to her teaching. She’s been teaching there for four years as an enthusiastic alumn of that very school. She says of the opportunity to teach at St. John, “I accepted the opportunity to teach at St. John’s because I have so many great memories from when I was a student there. St. John’s is rich in faith, education and fellowship.”

Weikel’s fond childhood memories of St. John School include opportunities for faith, service and friendship.

She says, “It was a smaller school so I was able to participate in many things: student council, sports and clubs. I also appreciated the chance to attend Mass twice a week. I created a relationship with God and made lifelong friendships.”

Now as a teacher in the school of her youth she once again embraces that sense of community, and the support of the other teachers, Principal Janice Comito and their pastor, Father Bill Sullivan. “Everyone is involved and pitches in to make our school a great place to be. The enthusiasm is contagious and the students reap the benefits,” she says.

As Weikel grows her teaching career at St. John, she can see similarities between when she was a student and now as a teacher. “It has always been a community that worked together for the greater good. St. John’s has always been a smaller school, which leads to many opportunities for our students,” she reports, adding, “St. John’s also has many familiar faces. Many of the teachers I had as a student are now coworkers, former schoolmates have become coworkers, and former classmates now have families of their own attending St. John’s.”

That spirit of family draws the over 350 students currently educated in the classrooms of St. John the Baptist School.

The differences Weikel has experienced from youth to now only benefit the students. She reports, “St. John’s is different today from when I attended as a student in the fact that there is more technology. Each classroom is equipped with computers, televisions, projectors, ELMOS and some with SMART boards.”

She also recalls quite different lunchroom foods. “We now have lunches that are prepared daily in the cafeteria, a huge upgrade from the satellite lunches we were provided,” she says.

Weikel is grateful to be teaching at her alma mater and says, “St. John’s has always fostered faith and relationships with God and others. ... I couldn’t have asked for anything more.”

National Catholic Schools Week celebrated Jan. 26 through Feb. 1

WASHINGTON — The theme for the National Catholic Schools Week 2014 is “Catholic Schools: Communities of Faith, Knowledge and Service.” The annual observance starts the last Sunday in January and runs all week, which in 2014 is Jan. 26 to Feb. 1.

Schools typically celebrate Catholic Schools Week with Masses, open houses and other activities for students, families, parishioners and the community at large.

The 2014 theme was developed in response to member requests for a theme and logo that would last more than a year. The new theme will be used for at least three years. This will provide opportunities for schools to brand the week and their ongoing marketing activities with repeated mentions and use of a consistent logo. It’s especially appropriate that this new brand will mark National Catholic Schools Week 2014 — the 40th anniversary of this annual event.

The theme encompasses several concepts that are at the heart of a Catholic education. First, schools are communities — small families in their own right, but also members of the larger community of home, church, city and nation. Faith, knowledge and service are three measures by which any Catholic school can and should be judged.

The new logo features a swirl of colors interacting around a cross, which is at the center of all Catholic education. The vibrancy of the colors and the movement and shadows in the logo portray the inner-connectivity and community life that are present in Catholic schools.

South Bend — When Kevin McMahon began his college career at Purdue University he planned to study computer science. Over the course of his first year, however, he realized that he was more interested in interacting with people than sitting behind a desk, and started to discern other career paths.

“I had an epiphany moment, when I realized that I loved being around kids and that I wanted to have an impact on young people,” McMahon explains.

It occurred to him that education might be a good fit for his skills and interests. He thought back to his days in primary school at St. Matthew Cathedral School in South Bend, where he attended kindergarten through eighth grade. Just a few months after graduation from Purdue with a degree in elementary education in hand, McMahon found himself once again within the walls of his grade school, this time interviewing for a position as a kindergarten teacher.

A South Bend native, McMahon had hoped to find a teaching job in the area and was delighted when the opportunity at St. Matthew’s presented itself. He described his return to the school in the fall of 2012 as a “homecoming” of sorts, because of the continuity of the faculty and the families that have remained at the school over the years.

“So many of the teachers that influenced my life when I was going through school are still here, so I was excited to join that trend of influencing people,” McMahon added.

One of those particularly influential teachers was Steve Dance, who now teaches seventh- and eighth-grade social studies and literature.

“Mr. Dance was actually one of the reasons that I thought about coming to teach here,” McMahon commented, recalling the path that led him back to St. Matthew’s.

Among the four current alumni of whom is currently an eighth grader, she found an abundance of resources amid her fellow teaching staff and many willing mentors.

Manley currently teaches fifth-and sixth-grade math and has also juggled several other subjects this year as she covers for two teachers who are on leave. A lifelong member of St. Matthew Cathedral, Manley is one of six siblings who all attended the school at some point. She has been grateful in her first year of teaching for the supportive teaching staff at St. Matthew’s. Though apprehensive at first about teaching sixth grade, she found an abundance of resources and was welcomed by her fellow teaching colleagues.

Manley too has felt warmly welcomed by her fellow teachers at St. Matthew’s. She feels that “not much has changed” at the school since her days on the other side of the desk, but that this is a good kind of stasis.

Capannari too has felt warmly welcomed by her fellow teachers at St. Matthew’s. She feels that “not much has changed” at the school since her days on the other side of the desk, but that this is a good kind of stasis.

Ceginnari graduated from Marian High School in Mishawaka and earned her degree in elementary education from Saint Mary’s College. A veteran of the local Catholic education system, she is convinced that the faith-based education offered at St. Matthew’s is an invaluable asset to its students.

“Every class period begins and ends with prayer. All the learning is rooted in faith and everything relates back to it,” she said.

Each of the four alumni teachers mentioned the essential role that faith plays in their classrooms. While the influence of the Sisters of St. Joseph (the founding teaching staff of St. Matthew’s) diminished over the years, the school’s Catholic identity has not.

“We’re a traditional school,” Dance emphasized. “To be Catholic is to be traditional. We maintain that which is tantamount to our faith.”

He senses that the coming decade will bring a season of change for St. Matthew’s as long-time teachers retire with younger counterparts stepping in.
St. Michael teachers have fond memories as student and teaching

BY TIM JOHNSON

PLYMOUTH — Linda Shorter and Jena Dreibelbis have not only a love for teaching, but teaching at the very same school where they were educated as children — St. Michael School in Plymouth. They join Principal Amy Weidner who is also a “product” of St. Michael School.

“I attended St. Michael Catholic School for eight years grades 1-8,” Shorter told Today’s Catholic. “I have nine brothers and sisters who all attended St. Michael.”

She said her parents purchased a home two blocks from the school and “we walked to and from (school) daily. We also walked home for lunch.”

Shorter teaches grades 6-8 science, grades K-5 computer, grade 6 math and is the technology coordinator.

Dreibelbis recalled, “I have fond memories of the teachers and my principal, Mrs. Helen Shorter. I now currently teach with my former fifth-grade teacher, Mrs. Linda Shorter.”

“St. Michael’s has a strong tradition of annual programs such as the Christmas play, speech contest and spelling bee,” she added.

Dreibelbis started teaching at St. Michael because her children were attending the school at the time. In her 17 years of teaching, she taught 10 years in public school and seven years at St. Michael.

“I love the fact that we are a small family at St. Michael’s,” Dreibelbis said. “It’s also nice to get a little smile from my son as he passes by my room on his way to art class.”

Shorter recalled that she received a great Catholic education and “wanted to give back.”

“Teaching in a Catholic school is a vocation not a job,” she said.

What she likes most about teaching at the school of her childhood is “the privilege of including God in everyday instruction,” she noted.

to take their places. McMahon, Capannari and Manley represent that shift.

Principal Susan Clark is similarly pleased to have alumni return as teachers. “I think they’re a wonderful addition to our faculty here at St. Matt’s.” Clark taught sixth grade at the school when McMahon, Capannari and Manley were students. “It says a lot about our school and the education they received here that they would want to come back and continue it on.”

While each of the alumni may have taken a slightly different route, Capannari knows that it’s the common love for the faculty, students and families of St. Matthew’s that brought them back to where they started.

“We’ve come full circle.”

St. Matthew has four teachers who were educated at the school and returned to teach. From left are Paige Manley, Kevin McMahon and Anna Capannari. They join Steve Dance, also an alum of St. Matthew, who has been teaching there for nearly 40 years.

Shorter, who has taught 30 years with 27 of those years at St. Michael, said, “There is a new addition and some upgrades but basically it is the same building that holds wonderful memories.”

One change over the years, she said, is “the demographics of the school have changed from two-parent families to single parent, step parents and grandparents caring for the students.”

Dreibelbis, who teaches grades 6-8 language arts, grade 6 reading, and grade 7 religion, told Today’s Catholic, “Now that I’m a teacher, I see students do innocent little things that make me laugh, and I often wonder if my teachers used to chuckle at me in much the same way.”

Value The Difference.
Bishop Rhoades exhorted his listeners to think about their own Confirmations and to open their hearts daily to God’s gifts of right judgment and courage.

He likened receiving the gift of the Holy Spirit in the sacrament of Confirmation to receiving a new credit card, which can’t be used until it is activated.

“We activate it when we open ourselves to the gifts we receive,” he said, “when we listen to the Holy Spirit in our lives, when we allow ourselves to receive the Holy Spirit’s guidance.”

This especially happens through prayer, he reminded them, and asked them to pray for Alex and themselves. “May the Holy Spirit guide you in the way of Jesus and help you to become saints!”

Another highlight of the day was the announcement of the Light of Learning Award, which was bestowed on Jessica Hayes, theology teacher at Bishop Dwenger High School, by Principal Jason Schiffli. In accepting the award Hayes thanked her students, especially those in her landmark Dignity of Women class. She said, “You’ve made me a perpetual student of our Catholic faith.”

The day concluded with classroom appearances, meetings with Student Council members, faculty members and later with the principal. Bishop Rhoades clearly enjoys visiting Catholic schools and interacting with the students. Principal Schiffli summed up the students’ reaction to the special day with their bishop: “They enjoy it (when he visits). He’s a tangible person, not just a figurehead.”
City of Fort Wayne proposes investing $3 million in Legacy Fort Wayne funds to renovate future USF Downtown Campus

FORT WAYNE — University of Saint Francis and Fort Wayne officials announced Friday, Jan. 10, that they have reached an agreement that will spur development in the heart of the city’s financial and arts districts. The agreement is ready to move to the City Council for approval. The Legacy Fort Wayne funds are a three-to-one matching award supporting the $12 million USF downtown development plans.

The funds will be used to renovate and upgrade the USF Performing Arts Center, the former Scottish Rite Center at 431 W. Berry St., and the former Fort Wayne Area Chamber of Commerce building adjacent to it at 826 Ewing St.

Since 2012, the university has purchased the chamber building and the Scottish Rite with plans to locate its business school and Media Entrepreneurship Training in the Arts (META) and music technology programs within the buildings. The USF programs compliment the thriving business and arts districts that flourish in the heart of downtown Fort Wayne.

“This Legacy Fort Wayne funding supports our downtown momentum,” said university President Sister M. Elise Kriss, a Sister of St. Francis of Perpetual Adoration. “With the grant, upgrades and renovations can be made to create the space, technology and resources our innovative programs require.

“Locating the school of business near the USF Performing Arts Center supports the META program’s development,” she said. “Since META intersects with business courses, locating the study centers near one another creates convenience for our students while partnering with the city to draw visitors to an enhanced downtown. The move also provides more space for the business school’s other programs.”

“The University of Saint Francis has already made a significant commitment to the revitalization of downtown Fort Wayne with the purchase of the former Chamber of Commerce Building and the former Scottish Rite,” said Fort Wayne Mayor Tom Henry. “The university’s plans to renovate these buildings and fill them with 250 to 300 students will advance educational attainment and the continuing positive momentum in our vibrant and exciting downtown. We’re investing in our future with a strong commitment to education and quality of life.”

For more information on the proposed funding agreement, visit cityoffortwayne.org.

Violinist violence

her still-widely-read 1971 article, “A Defense of Abortion,” Judith Jarvis Thomson sets up a thought experiment known as “The Famous Violinist Problem” to argue that abortion ought to be morally justified when a pregnancy arises out of sexual assault: “You wake up in the morning and find yourself back to back in bed with a ... famous unconscious violinist. He has been found to have a fatal kidney ailment, and the Society of Music Lovers has canvassed all the available medical records and found that you alone have the right blood type to help. They have therefore kidnapped you, and last night the violinist’s circulatory system was plugged into yours, so that your kidneys can be used to extract poisons from his blood as well as your own. ... To unplug you would be to kill him. But never mind, it’s only for nine months. By then he will have recovered from his ailment, and be safely unplugged from you.”

Most people would share the intuition that they should be able to unplug themselves from the violinist, since they didn’t consent to being hooked up in the first place. Others would suggest an analogy with becoming pregnant. If rape, so the mother could “unplug” herself from the child by abortion.

At least two serious problems, however, exist with this analogy. First, the famous violinist is not a good parallel for the child conceived by sexual assault. The violinist in Thomson’s thought experiment is basically a stranger to us. But the child conceived in rape is not, properly speaking, a stranger at all, and the analogy should probably be corrected to indicate this: “When the woman wakes up, she finds herself connected to a prodiogy violinist who also happens to be her 12-year-old son.” In such a scenario, she would far more easily admit an obligation to remain attached to him, even for an extended period of time. Following a rape that results in pregnancy, a woman likewise finds herself connected to her own progeny, her own child in utero, with similar natural moral obligations to nurture and care for.

Allow divine grace to empower us

THE SUNDAY GOSPEL

MSGR. OWEN F. CAMPION

3rd Sunday in Ordinary Time Mt 4:12-23

The Book of Isaiah supplies this weekend’s first reading. It offers us a powerful lesson. Isaiah lived in time when God’s people were skating on thin ice. They still had their arrogance, at least after a fashion. Hebrew kings still reigned in the kingdoms of Judah and Israel. The religious, social and political structures all still gave lip service to the ancient social and political structures all kings still reigned in the kingdoms of Judah and Israel. The religious, social and political structures all still gave lip service to the ancient Cornithian Christians. He yearned to see them saintly and eternally with the Lord, but obviously they troubled him, because they seemed so attracted to the many vices of their great, worldly and wealthy city, and they seemed so vulnerable to the feelings of competitiveness and insecurity that vex all humans if not checked.

Never willing to be passive or indifferent, he loudly called the Christians in this community to be true to their identity with Christ. He taught a basic message.

Earthly reward will pass, more quickly than many might realize. Earthly wisdom is only folly. True wisdom comes from around the meaning of the cross, and this understanding requires grace, available only to those who earnestly follow the Lord.

St. Matthew’s Gospel supplies the last reading. It is situated in Capernaum, the fishing village located on the Sea of Galilee. Jesus is there having left Nazareth. His public ministry has begun.

As a center of commerce, albeit very modest commerce, Capernaum saw many people come and go. Jesus used this coincidence as an opportunity to encounter many people. He called them to fidelity to God. He repeated for them the admonitions of the Hebrew prophets.

In this place Jesus met Andrew, and then Jesus met Simon, whom Jesus renamed Peter. These brothers became one of the foundational elements of the Church in the sequence of calling. In time, Christianity was to grow from, and build upon, the Apostles.

It is interesting that the Gospels, such as the case in this reading, refer to these Apostles so specifically by giving their names. The Gospel leaves no doubt whatsoever about their identity. It was vital in the early Church that the teachings of the genuine Apostles be known and he kept intact.

Reflection

These readings remind us of how blind we humans can be, and also of how powerful humans can be.

In the first reading, Isaiah critized the people for their religious listlessness, but he also presumed that, if they wished, they could reverse their wayward hearts and turn again to God.

In essence the same message was in the second reading, from Paul’s First Epistle to the Corinthians. He boldly denounced the Corinthians’ sins and quarrels. By calling them to conversion, however, he insisted that they had the power within themselves to be holy.

We are sinners, but we need not be sinners. Sin binds us. We truly can be free by seizing the power of our wills, allowing divine grace to empower us even more, and disdain sin to be one with Christ.

The teachings of the Apostles guide us and draw us to the Lord;

The cost of sainthood: Cardinal announces plan to contain fees

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Having a holy son or daughter formally recognized as a saint by the universal Church could easily cost a quarter of a million dollars. But experts say the Church isn’t selling halos; it’s compensating professionals doing serious research, so that a pope can solemnly declare his certainty a person is in heaven.

The costs involved in moving a cause from local treatment to universal veneration as a saint depend on a variety of factors, such as whether the postulator — the official promot- er of the cause — is voluntary or a hired gun, and how many potential miracles must be investigated before the pope formally recognizes those required for canonization.

Expenses typically include: collection and translation of eyewitness statements and documents; exhumation and reburial of the candidate’s body, if necessary; the dec- ision on the location of the grave; preparation and publication of the “positio,” a biography and official position paper documenting the candidate’s holiness; fees for theological, historical and medical consultants; and the beaification and canonization cer-

The head of the Congregation for Saints’ Causes announced Jan. 13 that his office had established a refer- ence list of standard charges for the process. Reporting the next day on Cardinal Angelo Amato’s announce- ment, the Vatican newspaper said it was a move “inspired by a sense of sobriety and equity, so there would no longer be a lack of uniformity” in the costs borne by different causes.

Jesuit Father Marc Lindeijer, vice postulator of sainthood causes for his order, told Catholic News Service Jan. 15 that if a cause “is not too complicated” — for instance, if the candidate died hundreds of years ago, making it impossible to interview eyewitnesses — the nor- mal cost of bringing a candidate to beatification is about 50,000 euros — or just more than $68,000 at current exchange rates — including the cost of the ceremony.

U.S. Catholic officials tradition- ally have used $250,000 as a bench- mark for the cost of a cause from the initial investigation on a diocesan level to a canonization Mass in St. Peter’s Square at the Vatican.

“The costs are relatively low compared to what similar services would cost in the real world,” Father Lindeijer said.

For example, obtaining a decree of the process’ validity — issued by the congregation and signed by all the paperwork and made sure every- thing was done properly — costs 150 euros, he said, “which is nothing considering the amount of work involved.”

The cause also must pay 150 euros each to as many as nine historians, theologians or other profes- sional consultants chosen by the congregation to study the “positio,” a document of at least 600 pages, and usually over 1,000 pages, Father Lindeijer said.

The congregation charges 350-400 euros for the decree opening the cause, the postulator’s “nihil obstat” (the assignment of a relator (the investigating judge), and the “nihil obstat” (“no objection”) permitting a diocesan bishop to open a local inquiry. The candidate’s sainthood official said the cause must pay 700 euros to each of the consulting physicians assigned by the congrega- tion to study a potential miracle.

Cardinal Amato did not say if the congregation would publish the pric- ing guidelines, which are currently available only to bishops and other officials.

Postulators for religious orders, such as the Jesuits, generally do not provide a salary or stipend, if the candidate is not a member of their order.

But some postulators are laypeo- ple chosen as a profession and they have to live off what they make, Father Lindeijer said.

“There have been unscrupulous people,” who have taken advantage of dioceses and religious orders, he said, “so it is good to have guidelines so that people beginning a cause know what it is likely to cost.”

Waldery Hilgenman, a 33-year- old layman serving as postulator of the cause of the late Vietnamese Cardinal Francois Nguyen Van Thuan and others, said he has no set price for his services.

“I never refuse a cause, even if it’s a poor cause, because for me it is a pastoral work,” he said. “I try to have a dialogue about what they can pay me. I cannot expect people in Africa to pay what a European or North American can.”

One of the biggest expenses of a canonization is the booklet, usually multilingual and in color, handed out to everyone at the Mass, Hilgenman said. But if a candidate is being can- onized with other saints, the cause needs to pay only for copies sufficient to supply its own pilgrims.

Mgsr. Greg Mustacchio, chancellor of the Archdiocese of New York and postulator of the cause of St. Maria Goretti, the founder of the Catholic Worker movement, said the cause has “spent almost as much as we’ve taken in sending out information from America.”

He and the others working on the cause, mainly employees of the arch- diocesan Catholic Charities, are not asking for a stipend, which is as just as well since the two largest groups of Catholics supporting the cause tend not to have money to donate.

What popes can and can’t do

A good friend habitually refers to the Wall Street Journal as his “favorite Catholic newspaper”—a bit of whimsy without foundation, given the openness of the Journal’s op-ed pages to serious Catholic argument on numerous issues. But just as Homer occasionally nods, so does America’s best newspaper. As he noted in Jan. 2, the Journal nodded, big-time, in this description of why Pope Francis was one of the “People to Watch” in 2014:

“After raising expectations for shifting views toward homosexual-ity, divorce, the environment and society’s obligations to the poor, the pontiff is expected to also undertake bureaucratic reform at the Vatican, as well as the possible expansion of the role of women in the Church.”

By my count, and bypassing the unnecessarily split infinitive, there are four errors in that one sentence, plus one grave misstatement of ecclesiastical “roles.”

Although it is very difficult for those who see Catholicism through political lenses to grasp this, popes are not like presidents or state governors, and doctrine is not like public policy. Which means that a change of papal “administration” does not—indeed cannot—mean a change of Catholic “views.”

Doctrine, as the Church understands it, is not a matter of anyone’s “views,” but of settled understandings of the truth of things.

Nor are popes free agents who govern by the seat of their pants, if you’ll permit the phrase. Prior to the completion of Vatican II’s Dogmatic Constitution on the Church, Pope Paul VI proposed adding to that seminal document a sentence stating that the pope is “accountable to the Lord alone” for an effort, I suspect, to protect papal authority and freedom of action from potential civil or ecclesiastical encroachments. But the council’s Theological Commission rejected Pope Paul’s proposed amendment, noting that “the Roman Pontiff is bound to reveal itself, to the fundamental structures of the Church, to the sacraments, to the definitions of earlier Councils, and to other obligations too numerous to mention.”

Those “other obligations” include honoring the truth of things built into the world and into us. At an academic conference years ago, a distinguished Catholic philosopher remarked (perhaps hyperbolically) that “If the pope said that ‘2+2 = 5’, I’d believe him.” An even more distinguished Catholic philosopher gave the correct, and far more Catholic, response: “If the Holy Father said that ‘2+2 = 5’, I would say publicly, ‘Perhaps I have misunderstood His Holiness’s meaning.’ Privately, I would pray for his sanity.”

Popes, in other words, are not autocratic figures, who teach what they will and as they will. The pope is the guardian of an authoritative tradition, of which he is the servant, not the master. Pope Francis knows this as well as anyone, as he has emphasized by repeating that he is a “son of the Church” who believes and teaches what the Church believes and teaches.

Thus the notion that this pontificate is going to change Catholic teaching on the morality of homosexual acts, or on the effects of divorce and remarriage on one’s communion with the Church, is a delusion, although the Church can surely develop its pastoral approach to homosexuals and the divorced. As for the environment and the poor, Catholic social doctrine has long taught that we are stewards of creation and that the least of the Lord’s brethren have a moral claim on our solidarity and our charity; the social doctrine leaves open to debate the specific, practical means by which people of good will, and governments, exercise that stewardship, and that solidarity and charity.

And “the role of women in the Church?” No doubt various Church structures would benefit by making a wider range of talent (irrespective of gender) available to them. Pope Francis made it clear that identifying leadership in the Church with ordination is both a form of clericalism and another way of instrumentalizing Catholic women. Flying a Vatican desk, Francis was suggesting, is not the same as ordination.

As for Curial reform: Oremus, as we used to say.

our own flesh and blood.

The second problem with Thomson’s analogy is that abortion is not like “unplugging” a tube connecting one person to another, and allowing the dependent individual to expire. From a condition like kidney failure. Instead, abortion involves various surgical and obstetrical procedures that directly end the life of, and dismember the, an in utero child.

Norma McCorvey, the former “Jane Roe” of the Roe vs. Wade Supreme Court decision, herself once worked in an abortion clinic and later described what happened there: “When a later abortion was performed, workers had to piece the baby back together and every major part—head, torso, two legs, and two arms—had to be accounted for. One of our little jokes at the clinic was, ‘If you ever want to humiliate a doctor, hide a leg so he thinks he has to go back in.’ Please understand, these were not abnormal, uncaring women working with me at the clinic. We were just involved in a bloody, dehumanizing business, all of us for our own reasons. Whether we were justifying our past advocacy (as I was), justifying a previous abortion (as many were) or whatever, we were just trying to cope—and if we couldn’t laugh at what was going on, I think our minds would have snapped.”

McCorvey’s comments remind us that abortion is essentially a violent and deadly act, not a euphemistic “unlooking” or “separating” of mother and child. Thus we might wish to modify Thomson’s analogy once again in order to maintain parallelism: “A woman wakes up in the morning and finds herself attached to a violinist. To free herself from any further involvement with him, she asks a doctor to come in with a knife and to dismember the renowned musician.” The absolute wrongness of such direct killing would remain beyond dispute, as would the wrongness of any direct killing actions by a raped woman directed against her unborn son because of the sins of his father.

In reflecting on the specifics of “The Famous Violinist Problem,” we begin to appreciate the importance of never surrendering our third party, whether a musician or an in utero child, to direct lethal harm simply because they find themselves in a state of radical dependence upon another human being. Although we aren’t obligated to use extreme or extraordinary measures to try to save the violinist in Thomson’s thought experiment, we shouldn’t make the error of supposing that the state of pregnancy itself is somehow extraordinary or extreme, even in the tragic case of sexual assault, given that it objectively results in the natural and familial line of duty to care for our own offspring.

Conversion of Paul the Apostle

First century
January 25

When the Jewish Pharisee Saul set out from Jerusalem to Damascus, his aim was to persecute the fledgling Christian community. The dramatic story of St. Paul’s miraculous conversion is told several times in the Acts of the Apostles and New Testament letters. Paul became the Apostle to the Gentiles and carried Christ’s message around the Roman Empire. He shares a feast with St. Peter on June 29. The January feast was known as the “translation” in the martyrology of St. Jerome; it may originally have commemorated the moving of Paul’s relics. Now, it appropriately closes the Week of Prayer for Christian Unity. Paul is the patron saint of Greece, Malta and the Cursillo movement.

St. Joseph, Decatur, captures Commodore Classic title

By Michelle Castlemann

Decatur — St. Joseph Catholic School in Decatur hosted its annual Commodore Classic boys’ basketball tournament on Jan. 3-4. This year, seven teams from New Haven, Fort Wayne, Ossian and Decatur participated and it was Catholic Youth Organization’s (CYO) eighth-grade Eagles from St. Therese, Fort Wayne, (SJFW) who went undefeated to capture the title.

The Eagles earned the No. 1 seed entering the knockout stage of the tournament, having given up the fewest points of all of the undefeated teams after pool play had concluded. By virtue of their top spot, SJFW received a bye in the quarterfinals and advanced directly to the semifinal round.

In the semifinal game, the Eagles defeated the No. 5 seed, St. John, New Haven, 40-27. In the championship, the Eagles faced Bellmont Middle School’s eighth-grade team (No. 3) in what was the fourth game of the day for both teams. The game was close and extremely competitive the entire way, until the Eagles hit two key three-pointers in the final two minutes to pull out a 34-26 victory over the Braves.

Coach Andre Goodwell attributed the win to his team’s defense, “Our motto is better defense will lead to more offense. The more the ball is in our hands, the more opportunities we have to score.”

Leading by just one point at the half, Goodwell continued, “Our defense really got after it. We had some big late steals and took advantage of their big guy being fouled out.”

Goodwell lists eight on his roster. This is his second year with a strong core group of Eagles who were CYO runners-up a year ago as seventh graders. “We also have some great additions which rounded things out nicely, he added. SJFW has a goal to always be competitive and hopes to advance to the CYO championship this season.

Holy Family Trojans, Crusaders of Holy Cross square off

By Joe Kozinski

South Bend — The titans of the Inter-City Catholic League’s St. John Bosco Division squared off to determine who would rule the roost and have the inside track for the title at Saint Joseph High School.

The Crusaders of Holy Cross and the Holy Family Trojans pitted their unblemished division records against each other in what would become a classic duel amongst rivals.

The scoring started pretty uninspiring as Crusader guard Antonio Blackman netted a couple of free throws from the charity stripe a couple of minutes into the game.

The Trojans would counter punch with their big man, Ben Ujdic, as he rebounded and scored inside basket after inside basket giving the Columbia-blue clad clan an early 10-9 lead at the end of one.

The stingy press on the Crusaders would rule the second quarter as run-out face break points off of turnovers would push them into the lead and heading to halftime guarding a 24-21 margin.

The lead would change if Trojan wingman Mason Ryan had anything to say about it, as the hard nosed guard knocked down a three-point shot for the tie and another for the lead and yet one the old-fashioned way to push the expance to six.

The Crusader tandem of Blackman and Elliot Zyniewicz persisted by slashing the heart of the defense and getting to the basket eventually narrowing the deficit to three after three.

Eighth-grade Squire girls cling to dream team

By Michelle Castlemann

Fort Wayne — Kathryn Knapke and Jessica Dodane are the only two girls in the eighth-grade class at St. Joseph-Hessen Cassel (SJHC) this year. And the two have won a Catholic Youth Organization (CYO) title playing basketball together every year since the fourth grade.

So, even when their numbers were low, the girls did everything they could to wear the Squire uniform one last time. Just to have enough for a team, SJHC had to pull up four sixth graders and combine with three players from St. Therese.

In her sixth season back at SJHC, a pleased Coach Maria Parsenow explained, “Kathryn and Jessica are hardworking basketball players and have really stepped up as our leaders.”

And in their quest for another championship, the two had a big game against league rival, St. Rose/St. Louis, on Saturday morning, Jan. 18.

Knapke led all scorers with 11 points and Dodane made clutch free throws in the final minute of regulation and the winning basket in overtime in a 31-29 win over the Twins, who had previously beaten the Squires at the Hoosier Tournament over Christmas break.

The matchup was once again a battle with a 7-7 score after one quarter, the Twins leading 14-12 at the half and the Squires up 21-18 after the third. The Squires hung on in an all-out team effort.

Parsenow noted defense as a strong point this season and detailed, “We are really starting to gel as a team.”

Allivia Beard added nine points in the win, while Grace Castlemann had 10 and Erica Rentinger finished with seven in the loss for the Twins.

Although Hessen Cassel finished in the middle of the pack in two different tournaments, Parsenow felt the experience was beneficial.

“We knew it would be tough competition against the bigger schools with all eighth graders,” she said.

However, with a win over Most Precious Blood on Jan. 11, SJHC is now 2-0 in the Blue League. The Twins dropped to 1-1. The two will face each other again on Feb. 2.

Marian High School wrestler Derek Glon made school history at the Northern Indiana Conference (NIC) at Mishawaka High School by winning the school’s first conference championship. Glon wrestles in the 138-pound class and won by a 6-0 decision. The NIC is a conference with state powerhouse, which include Penn High School and Mishawaka High School. Saint Joseph High School’s Ryan Jankowski also was conference champion in the 182-pound class. Shown is Glon and opponent Peter Rymsza of Saint Joseph High School in the final match to determine the 138-pound champion. Glon placed first and Rymsza placed second.

 Philippine figure skater who can’t always afford coach turns to prayer

BY SIMONE CRENDAIN

MANILA, Philippines (CNS) — In the lobby of a luxury hotel, Michael Christian Martinez balanced on one leg and swung the other forward. The lanky 17-year-old was on the ball of his foot and looked like he was about to spring upward into the air.

“I’ve been in therapy for almost three weeks,” said Martinez. “I’m having this feeling like I need to go. It feels like I’m getting crazy like when I’m not in the ice because I’ve been there and my life (has been) in the loss.”

In eight short years, the shy kid from a tropical country that has only one skate rink has become an international skater and a Catholic convert — and a convert who turns to prayer, with some skating skills, some techniques, but I’m not as good as, you know, the real coaches. He and his mother, Maria Teresa Martinez, were convinced prayer helps him win his first senior-level gold medal at the Crystal Skate competition in Romania in 2012.
